UNCLE SAM FINDS BUYERS FOR STRANGE MERCHANDISE

Buyers for the strangest articles of merchandise are found annually by the Post Office Department in its sales of parcels sent by mail and left unclaimed beyond the legal period. Such parcels are periodically sold at auction and an analysis of the past year's sales, made by the Woman's Home Companion, shows that Uncle Sam manages to get a pretty respectable price for most of these commodities poured out of the cornucopias of modern civilization.

Nine pails of pickled mackerel, however, fetched only a dollar. A woman bought eight whiffletrees and ten martingales for two dollars. Twenty-three pairs of dumbells brought thirteen dollars. A push-cart peddler paid six hundred and thirty-six dollars for an assortment of false teeth, fountain pens, dresses and other articles "'new soiled and damaged." There were one hundred and sixteen boxes of candles (two dollars), one hundred and forty radio tubes (thirteen dollars) one hundred fraternity pins (nine dollars) four hundred and fifty tubes of toothpaste (four dollars) and so on up to a seal skin coat for one hundred dollars.

THE AGRICULTURAL OUTLOOK FOR 1931

The year 1930 closed with the lowest average agricultural prices that we have had for years. Many agricultural commodities are selling below the cost of production and the immediate future does not indicate much change. However, owing to the decreased production in 1930 on account of the extreme drought in many states there should come a time before long when the so-called surplus has been used and then we should receive better prices for our agricultural products.

Whenever agriculture shows a decided improvement the general business depression will also improve.

CORN SUGAR RECOGNIZED FIRST IN IOWA

Des Moines, Iowa, January 7, — Iowaclaims the honor not only of having the men who carried the fight for national recognition of corn sugar but of being the first state to recognize this product for use in the manufacture of food products.

In 1925, when the fight for recognition of corn sugar was frowned upon by national officials, M. G. Thornburg, Iowa's Secretary of Agriculture, adopted the following food rule which permitted the use of corn sugar in this state: "All standards for foods, except sugar, not fixed by law shall conform to those proclaimed by the United States Secretary of Agriculture."

The importance of this rule was that it permitted the use of corn sugar in the manufacture of food products, such as preserves or other canned foods, without labeling the product so that the consuming public would be prejudiced against it In other words, Iowa Iowa adopted the same attitude towards corn sugar that Secretary Hyde has now adopted for the entire nation.

National authorities have unofficially permitted the use of corn sugar in the manufacture of ice cream and confectionery goods for some time but have not permitted it to be used in the manufacture of oher products, such as canned goods without declaring it on the label of the product in a manner that would indicate it was substituted for cane sugar. This change in the national rule should materially increase the use of this splendid food prodnct.

GOLDFIELD BANK INSTALLS TEAR GAS

Goldfield State and Trust Co., instllaed a tear gas system Monday to protect the bank against burgulars. Monday evening the system was tried out in the presence of bankers from Renwick, Thor and members of the Wright County vigilante committee.

The system shoots off bombs of tear gas by touching buttons at various places in the bank. The gas, which blinds one for sometime, leaves no harmful effects, and is reccomended by the State Banking Department. Rates of burgular insurance will probably be cut with the installation of the system.—Humboldt Independent.

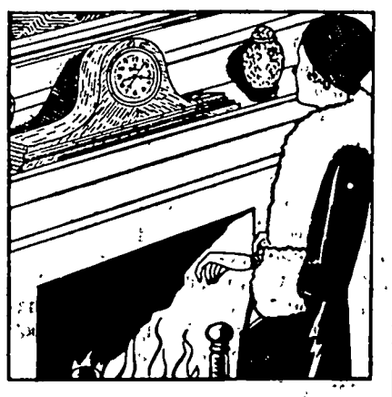
Hints For Homemakers

By Jane Rogers



A MASTER clock in the home, by which all the other timekeepers can be regulated and correct time assured, is a boon alike to the housewife who must start children off to school and the man of the house who must be at his place of business on time. A modern electric clock that plugs into the wall and can't lose or gain a second without showing a warning signal, admirably meets the need.

When packing dresses in trunks or suitcases it's always wise to place tissue paper in the sleeves and between folds to prevent creases.

COUNTY MEDICAL SOCIETY HAS NEW ACCOUNT SYSTEM

The members of the Hancock-Winnebago Medical Society at a meeting held at Garner Monday evening took definite action regarding delinquent and slow accounts. It was the consonance of opinion of the members that drastic measures were necessary in the handling of medical accounts.

Too many who are able to pay for medical service have been taking advantage of the well known generosity and good heartedness of the medical proffession and have held that the doctor bill was the last to be paid, although that service might have meant life or death to themselves or their loved ones.

While willing as ever in the past to render service as a charity, where emergency and necessity warrant, the physicians have come to the point where it is absolutely necessary that they should place their service on a strictly business basis, urging those who are unable to pay for medical service should apply to the county for aid, and not throw the burden on the individual physician.

For the above reasons the Medical Society has adopted the following resolutions:

1. That all accounts shall bear interest at 6 percent if not paid in sixty days.

2. That all past due accounts shall be turned over to the County Credit Boards of the Pioneer Service Co. Inc. of Iowa City, Iowa, which in addition to its regular Monthly Credit Reports furnished all members, shall issue special reports to the members of this society which reports shall give the name and address of the debtors, amounts due, and the name of the physician to whom such accounts are due, in order that all members of this Society may know the facts and govern themselves accordingly in rendering medical service to such delinquents until the accounts are satisfactorily settled. These lists to be on file in the office of every physician in Hancock, Winnebago and adjoining counties.

Delinquent debtors will receive due notice, and will not be listed providing satisfactory settlement is made with creditor within ten days.

The above resolutions to be in effect on and after January 1, 1931.

9 CAR LOADS STOCK SHIPPED LAST WEEK

LAST WEEK'S HIGH MARK WILL PROBABLY BE RECORD

However The Nine Car Shipment Of Past ueek Is No Small Matter

The seventeen car loads which were shipped out of the Klemme stock yards a week ago, will probably stand as the record shipment for the season. Tre vast amount of that week's shipment makes the past week's shipment of nine car loads look rather small, however it is no small shipment, and most any town, mucr arger than Klemme, would think it an extraordinary bit of news.

During the past week there were six car loads of hogs shipped out of the Klemme Yards. Three car loads of cattle were shipped.

Of this amount, seven car loads were shipped Saturday, and yesterday there were two car loads.

In the Saturday shipment were two car loads of cattle by Klemme Shipping Association. of which Joe Jornson is the manager; one load of cattle by Vic Schoenwetter, and four car loads of hogs by C. A. Larsen. Larsen again shipped out two car loads of hogs yesterday.

Klemme is noted as being the largest live stock shipping point along the Rock Island.

Klemme shippers always pay up to the very top. The large shipments are proof enough of this statement.

tl will pay you to get the habit of trading in Klemme, whether selling or buying—you will find Klemme business men can save you money.

PASSION PLAY TO BE AT MASON CITY

Famous Freiburg Player to Portray Life of Christ, Jan 10, 11 and 12

The world's most outstanding religious spectacle, the Freiburg Passion Play, will be enacted for North Iowans at the Mason City High School auditorium on Jan. 10, 11 and 12. The production will be presented in the English language by the internationally famous Fassnacrt family. The Clausen-Worden Post of the American Legion is sponsoring the project as an item of Community service.

The Freiburg Passion Play dates even further back into history than the production of Oberammergau which every ten years draws hordes of Americans to the little Bavarian city. Hundreds of North Iowans will embrace this opportunity to witness at a nominal expense the spectacle which requires an investment of hundreds of dollars from those who go to Oberammergau.

The cast in the moving religious drama will be the same as has thrill ed the crowds in Hammerstein's great theater in New York and the theaters of other large cities in the past year and a half. The principal parts are played by members of the famous Fassnacht family, recognized as the world's greatest actors of religious drama.

As the life of Christ is unfolded in spoken word and in pageantry, there will be a background of music by a crorus of 60 voices, specially trained for the event.

The production will be given five times as follows: Saturday night, Sunday matinee Sunday night Monday matinee (Students) and Monday night. The tickets of admission will be 50 cents for students and $1.00 for adults for the Monday matinee and $1.00, $1.50, $2.00 for all other preformances wrich are reserved. Reservations may be made by addressing the Freiburg Passion Play Headquarters, 327 M. B. A. Bldg., Mason City, Iowa, or telephoning 60, Mason City, Iowa.

DOUBLE HEADER WITH THOMPSON FRIDAY NIGHT

Both High School and Independent Teams Will Be In Action

Friday night of this week will see both of the local teams in action as a double header is scheduled with Thompson. These should be two fast games as Thompson usually gives plenty of competition with both their independent and high school teames.

The local independent team has a good record so far with 3 wins out of 4 games played and are anxious to show their stuff against the visiting team.

Let's all attend these games and get behind the local teams. There will be plenty of fast, clean basket ball for everyone.

750 FARMERS FINISH RECORDS

Farm Management Adopted by 65 Counties for 1931 — Interest Tripled Since 1926

Approximately 750 Iowa farmers from 54 counties completed the keeping of farm records as a part of the farm management project during 1930, according to J. C. Galloway, farm management specialist in the Extension Service at Iowa State College, in charge of the farm management work.

The 750 farmers who finished the past year's work is more than triple the number of farmers who completed the work in 1926, the first year it was offered. In 1926 239 farmers completed farm record in 1927, 394; in 1928, 451 and in 1929, 650.

A total of 65 counties have included farm management work in treir 1931 program as compared to 54 in 1930. Two four-county farm management associations are now functioning. The one wth headquarters at Ackley is entering its third year and the newly organized one in Boone, Green Calhoun and Webster counties starts its activities this month.

Farm management projects include the making of inventories, the keeping of a complete and uniform farm record, analysis of the record and the study of farm business problems. Specialists in the Extension Service, county agents and in the case of four-county associations, the farm management advisor, give help on these activities.

TREES MAY PROVE BEST CROP

Bode Believes Mucr Iowa Land Should Be Reforested

Trees may be a profitable crop on much of Iowa's farm land if they are grown as a permanent crop, according to I. T. Bode, extension forester at Iowa State College.

Many acres of land from which the timber has been cut and many fields hich are hilly or of low fertility now under cultivation should be reforested.

The best system to follow as the timber develops or on timber land now existing is to take out only the mature trees first, allowing he vounger trees to develop for future cutting.

Pruning the lower branches from the trees not only stimulates better growth, but provides a tree with a butt log relatively free from knots. This kind of log is worth 3 times as much for lumber as knotty butts. Trees should not be allawed to become crowded or they will not grow at the maximum rate.

HOG HOUSES DO DOUBLE DUTY

Serve For Both Pigs and Chicks on New Providence Farm

Since E. F. Morris, farmer living near New Providence, quit raising two crops of pigs a year for various reasons and because he needed more room for the spring hatched chicks. late in the summer, he makes the movable hog houses do double duty.

Incidentally, Mr. Morris says keeping records and membership in the Four-County Farm Business Association have helped him plan his farm business more efficently and see where improvements ould be made. The re-adjustment of the hog and poultry business is just another example of changes made by farmers who keep records.

When the pigs are ready to be brought back to the colony house sometime in August the spring hatched chicks have grown until the brooder houses are too small for them. The movable hog ouse is cleaned again and placed in the chicken yard to relieve the congestion. The McLean system is follow ed in both poultry and hog raising.

In the spring when the season for hatching eggs is over and the special pens for breeding poultry are released, the spring pig crpo is ready for the meadow and what was a poultry house becomes a hog house again.

SOME SEED CORN FROZEN

Condition Not Serious But Germination Tests Needed, Says Dyas

Altho seed corn in general was not injured the past fall by freezing individual lots have been found which contain a large percentage of frozen ears, according to E. S. Dyas, crops specialist in the Extension Service at Iowa State College.

For this reason Mr. Dyas urges the testing of seed corn, especially the late picked supplies.

When 1,000 kernels taken at random from the corn ehow at Collins Institute recently were tested it was found that he composite sample had 94 percent germination. However some individual lots had such a high percentage as to make them worthless as seed. Corn in which the germ has been killed by freezing may be identified by cutting open the kernel. The germ, if frozen, will appear as a soft yellow cheesy mass instead of creamy white and slightly brittle.

Other college men have noticed frozen ears in various exhibits, indicating that care should be taken in selecting the 1931 seed supply.

Avery Township Farm Bureau held a meeting at the Opera House in Goodell, on Dec. 29.

A play, "Nevada," or "The Lost Mine", was given by the Meservey American Legion and Auxilary and was well given.

J. H. Sims read the minutes of the previous meeting and chairman Virgil A. Cook announced there would not be any Farm Bureau meetings held in January or February, but in March at the home of Mrs. Henry Crurch

The refreshment committee—Mrs. Schluter, Mrs. Sims and Mrs. Ferdinand Lemke served doughnuts and coffee.

THE FOOL'S PARADISE

How do you like this:

I know there are onions in heaven;
For they have a heavenly smell.
A smell like the smile of a ong-ost friend
Who has good news to tell.

Roses are lovely and fragrant,
But who ever tasted them fried?
And lilies are nice to lay on the breast
Of one who has lately died.

But onions—aroma immortal!—
That smother a steak done well!
I know there are onions in heaven
For they have a heavenly smell!

"Brethren", exclaimed the parson, "don' yo' all know it's wrong to shoot craps?"

"Yes, Pahson," admitted one parishloner sadly, "an believe me, Ah's payin' for mah sins."

The BEST Gray Hair Remedy is Home Made

To half pint of water add one ounce bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and one-fourth ounce of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. It will gradually darken streaked, faded or gray hair and make it soft and glossy. Barbo will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off.

Odd Beliefs Long Held Concerning the Sneeze

The Greeks, when they ask for a blessing upon those afflicted by sneezing, "claimed to follow the example of Prometheus, who stole celestial fire to animate the beautiful figure he had made of clay; as the fire permeated its frame, the newly formed creature sneezed, and the delighted Prometheus invoked blessings on it." According to Aristotle, the first man who conceived the idea that the head was the principal seat of the soul, regarded the sneeze with great respect because it was the most manifest operation of the head. Hence the compliments of the Greeks and Romans, "Long may you live; may you enjoy health."

Some rabbis explain the custom by declaring that not long after the creation, God made a general decree that every man should sneeze but once, whereupon his soul should depart from his body without previous warning or indisposition. Jacob got the decree withdrawn so that man can sneeze as often as he chooses without danger. Therefore, whenever a man finds himself still living after a good gusty sneeze, people should express their gratitude with a blessing.

Birth Rate of Leaders Found Below Average

Except under very favorable conditions, such as that in royal families, the successful sections of society have always tended to die out. Just now our college graduates are easily demonstrated to be vanishing as a human breed. From them have sprung nearly three-fourths of our leaders, and in the future nearly all our leaders will secure some form of higher instruction.

In addition, Dr. Raymond Pearl of Johns Hopkins has shown that all occupational classes, which he divides into nine categories, are disappearing as groups, owing to insufficient birth rate. Only three classes, he finds, are reproducing themselves, namely, the farmers, factory workers and miners. The other six, namely the professionals, clerical, trade, domestic service, public service, and transportation groups, are not maintaining themselves.—Albert Edward Wiggam.

Test for Posture

An excellent test for correct posture, says Marguerite Agniel in the Parents' Magazine, is to stand facing the wall, placing the hands against the wall in front of the thighs so that the palms point upward. Now notice which part of the body strikes the wall first. If it is the chest, well and good; if it is the head, it is not so bad, but if the stomach touches first, something is wrong. To attain correct posture stretch the arms above the head until the back is arched and the chest high. Then with elbows pulled all the way down, draw the hands down to the shoulders, head back. Now retaining the general position of the body, return the hands to the sides and you will find yourself standing perfectly. Exercises for correcting bad posture include pushing up with the arms from a reclining position and raising the trunk from the same position without lifting the feet.

Feared Census Taking

One of the deterring factors in conducting a count of the early Colonists was superstition, says an article in the United States Daily.

In 1712 Governor Hunter of New York attempted an enumeration, but it was so inaccurate that he apologized to the home government and said that the inaccuracy was due to the superstition among the people that sickness had followed the last enumeration. Being so close to the New England colonists, these early settlers likened the enumeration to the sin that David committed in numbering the people, and they feared it might bring on the same judgments.

"New Netherland" Correct

The name of the Dutch colony in America is singular in form—"New Netherland." Even reputable historians frequently fall into the error of referring to it as New Netherlands. The country in Europe is officially and correctly called the Netherlands because it consists of an aggregation of small states; but the Dutch colony in the New world was a single province or unit and was properly called New Netherland. The name was always so spoken and written by the Dutch. —Pathfinder Magazine.

Woman's Ideal Stature

The Society of Directors of Physical Education has set forth the following standard for the ideal woman of today: Height, 63½ inches; breadth of neck, 3.8 inches; girth of neck, 12.1 inches; breadth of shoulders, 14.7 inches; breadth of waist, 8.6 inches; girth of waist, 24.6 inches; breadth of hips, 13.1 inches; girth of hips, 35.4 inches; girth of calf, 13.8 inches; girth of upper arm, 10.1 inches; girth of thigh, 21.4 inches, and forearm, 9.2 inches.

New Theatrical Idea

Out-of-work theatrical artists in Paris have hit upon a new method of bringing in the few honest sous that they require to sustain life. They have decided to revive a few of the old "thrillers" of decades ago and give them on an improvised stage in one of the public squares. The audience will give what it thinks the show is worth —by the tincup method.

Ernie Was Fast Worker, but Speed Didn't Count

Ernie was one of a group of friends on their way back from the Cape after a day in the water when a tire on one of the cars, went flat. After desperate tooting, the leading car was halted and the party in that machine, returning to volunteer aid, found that Ernie had made good progress in pulling off the damaged shoe.

With a deftness that surprised the party in view of the heat, Ernie soon had the ground covered with shoes, rim tools, nuts and what not. In a surprising time everything was fixed.

"Just let her down off that jack," he ordered one of the more immaculate in the party who was itching with an apparent urge to help. The jack was removed and the tire flattened in the road.

"What a swell job you did!" the gang echoed as Ernie looked around in disgust.

It was quickly found that Ernie had pulled off the punctured shoe and then put it back on again, at the same time the spare, all pumped up and rearing to go was still lying within his reach. —Brockton Enterprise.

Good Old Feather Bed Not Entirely Obsolete

Although feather beds are seldom seen in the cities, numbers of them are still in use in rural New England, particularly among elderly persons, says a writer in the New York Times Magazine. In earlier days the feathers of wild geese were considered best for stuffing the ticking, with duck feathers next. Both geese and ducks were numerous, and farmers and their sons found gunning profitable. There was a ready market not only for the feathers but for the bodies.

John Winter, in his account of expenditures at Richmond's island, (Maine), in 1639, mentions paying a shilling each for geese, four pence for ducks and two pence for teal. In 1810 a Maine gunner paid for a farm from the proceeds of the fowl he shot, the greater part being derived from the sale of brant feathers. The aristocracy demanded brant feathers for their feather beds; probably not because they were better than goose feathers, but because they were more rare.

Saved by Salt

One of the secret activities developed toward the end of the war was the creation of mine fields. One of the most important fields, 230 miles long by 35 wide, was laid down by Capt. D. Pratt Mannix and his associates, and is described by him in a special article for St. Nicholas Magazine. The mine laying ships consisted only of storage space for the mines and a deck railway to drop them overboard. One mine (weighing 300 pounds), was dropped and anchored every eight seconds. The only thing that prevented (usually!) an explosion from rough handling was a small cap of compressed salt which dissolved after half an hour's soaking in the ocean, and left the mine ready for work. Salt meant more to these heroes than to King Lear of bygone days.

Early American Libraries

In 1731 a subscription library was opened by Benjamin Franklin in Philadelphia. Many early subscription libraries have become the foundations of public libraries. The public library as we know it today was scarcely known before 1850 and has developed for the most part since the formation of the American Library association in 1876. The earliest tax-supported library is supposed to have been the town library of Salisbury, Conn., established in 1803. The oldest existing library is said to be the one at Petersborough, N. H., established in 1833.—Kansas City Star.

Dandy French Musketeers

A musketeer is a soldier armed with a musket, an infantryman of earlier times, but the word is specifically applied to a company of gentlemen who were a mounted guard in the service of the kings of France from 1661 down to the time of the revolution. They were clad in scarlet, hence their quarters were called the "Maison Rouge." In peace they followed the king on his hunting expeditions to protect him. In war they fought either on foot or on horseback. They were dandy soldiers, who went to war with curled hair, white gloves, "and perfumed like milliners."—Montreal Family Herald.

The Easiest Way

A young girl was talking the other day of what she desired to do with her life. While nobody appeared to know of any special aptitude she had for anything, she discussed the possibility of becoming an artist or writer.

It was evident that these things suggested effort, for after a while she said languidly:

"I don't know. Perhaps I shall just marry."

Nautical Difficulties

Sharon's mother bought her a toy sailboat and told her to put some water in the bathtub and sail. Fifteen minutes later Sharon came out on the front porch with the toy boat in her hand.

"Why aren't you sailing your boat?" asked her mother.

"Oh, the tub ran over and the boat kept falling out," replied Sharon calmly, "and I got tired of putting it back in!"

State Boundaries Long Matter of Disputation

For a great many years the boundary between the colony of New York and Massachusetts was in dispute. The government of New York maintained that the eastern limit was the Connecticut river, basing its claim upon a Dutch title. The Massachusetts government claimed territory westward as far as the Hudson river. For the purpose of establishing this claim the Boston government in 1659 made a grant of land on the Hudson river below Fort Orange and in 1672 sent John Payne to New York to solicit permission to pass and repass by water. He was most courteously received, but the claim was never recognized. The dispute finally reached such a stage, resulting in riots, etc., that it was submitted to the lord commissioners of trade of England, and George II in 1757, by royal order in council, determined the boundary, granting the territory to New York. This was still not acceptable until 1773, when commissioners from New York and Massachusetts met and finally decided the boundary according to the present lines.

Long Line of "Caesars" in Annals of Old Rome

Caesar was the surname of a renowned branch of a line of Roman patrician generals with the forename Julia. They claimed descent from the sons of Aeneas, the mythical Iulus.

Sextus Julius Caeser, a praetor in 208 B. C., is the earliest by that name to be mentioned in history. No direct male descendant was left to bear the name of the great Julius Caesar. Octavius, whom he had adopted and who later became the Emperor Augustus, took the name. The name passed, also through adoption, from Augustus to his immediate successors, Tiberius and Caligula. The use of the name was continued by Claudius and Nero, although they were not Julii. When Nero was killed, the use of Caesar as a family name was discontinued and it became the title of the reigning emperor. The title Caesar was used later to designate especially the heir presumptive, although it continued to remain part of the imperial title. It is from the title Caesar that those of the former Russian czars and German kaisers were derived.

Famous Old English Inn

The name of the Lion tavern figures continually in the records of old-time Shrewsbury, England. It was one of the great centers of social life from an early date, in this picturesque old town on the border of Wales. Its exquisite ballroom, designed and decorated by the Adam brothers, is alone well worth a pilgrimage. Famous feet have trod its oak boards, and in the musician's gallery Paganini once played. Here William IV "took the floor," in the year before Trafalgar. De Quincy spent a night at the Lion and Disraeli was here in his early days. In 1838 Charles Dickens, accompanied by "Phiz," was accommodated in what was then the annex, and wrote to his daughter of "the strangest little rooms, the ceilings of which I can touch with my hand," and how "the windows bulged out over the street as if they were the little stern windows of a ship." The same little windows still bulge and the lovely Adam room is still used for dancing.

A Relic

Little Roger, spending a holiday on his grandfather's farm, was permitted to beguile the hours of a wet day by turning over the leaves of the family Bible.

Suddenly he looked up from the faded pages and quaint pictures and called out:

"See what I've found, grannie!"

In his hand he held a leaf, old and dry, and after a few moments' reflection he added:

"Do you think it belonged to Adam and Eve, grannie?"

O. K. With Mother

One day, while entertaining a guest, Edwin's mother was called to the phone. Edwin promptly disappeared from the room to return with an expensive looking box of chocolates. After giving several to the guests, Edwin selected some for himself.

"Are you sure your mother knows we're eating this candy?" the guest asked.

"Sure!" said Edwin. "Didn't you see her frown and shake her head when I came through the hall with it?"

Well, What Did You Say?

We quote the utterance of four persons of different degrees of education and greatness as they gazed into the Grand canyon:

Theodore Roosevelt—God Almighty made the Grand canyon. Man cannot even make the words to describe it.

An Author—It bankrupts the English language.

Girl from New Jersey—Golly, what a gully.

Cowboy—It shore is a —— of a hole.—Vancouver Province.

Come-Apart Auto Invented

Designed so that it can be taken apart within 20 minutes and stored in hallways or basements a "midget automobile" has been invented by Zaschka, the well-known German inventor. The car is a three-wheeler, and can be "knocked down" in three main sections. It is capable of a speed of from 25 to 30 miles an hour.

Monks of Mount Athos Form Large Community

Mount Athos is a rocky promontory stretching 40 miles out into the Aegean sea. It is the home of the greatest monastic community in any Christian land. Nearly 5,000 monks dwell in this republic. Athos and all its buildings are owned by the 20 sovereign monasteries of the orthodox church that rule the peninsula. The Greek governor general's relation to the administration is that of a minister plenipotentiary. In a thousand years only one woman has set foot on Athos. She was the wife of Lord Stratford de Redcliffe, British minister at Constantinople during the Crimean war, and was permitted to land there as a special favor to her husband. Others claim to have been there, but the authorities at Athos deny their assertions. According to tradition, the first religious settlements were made during the reign of Constantinople. It is known, however, that St. Athanasius established the great monastery of Lavra in 969 and it is still standing.

Peculiarities of Concrete

The bureau of standards says that concrete does not blow up. Concrete, however, as well as practically every other material, expands with an increase in temperature. On a very hot day, under a sun, with no clouds in the sky, concrete roads will become very warm and expand to a considerable extent. If means are not taken in the design of the road to accommodate this expansion the road will "heave," as it is called, frequently breaking at the point where it has been raised in the air. The more cement that has been used per unit volume of concrete the greater will be the expansion.

Concrete also changes its volume due to changes in water content. Drying out causes shrinkage and wetting causes this expansion and contraction.

Go Afar for Perfume

When a tiny insect begins to damage rosebushes in Bulgaria, you may think that means nothing to you. Yet the result likely will be a higher price for certain perfumes sold in America, notes Aromatics magazine, for those decorative little bottles on the American woman's dressing table hold ingredients from every segment of the globe.

Grasse, in southern France, is the center of the floral perfume industry, but other flowers, blossoms and spices used in perfuming come from Spain, Cayenne, Brazil, Java, Ceylon, Japan and practically every known land. Even the sperm whale of the northern oceans contributes by producing the ambergris which is essential to many perfumes.

Great Early American

Stephen Girard of Philadelphia was at first a seaman, working up until he became a master of the coasting trade. He then settled in Philadelphia as a merchant and ship owner, who invested largely in the shares of the old Bank of the United States, 1810, and in 1812, on the lapsing of its charter, purchased a controlling interest in the building and reopened a bank under the name of the Stephen Girard bank. He retained the old officers of the bank and made it one of the foremost financial institutions of the country. His fortune at his death was about $7,500,000, and he left to Girard college about $5,250,000.

That Last Journey

When a death occurs it sometimes is said that the person has "Gone West." The phrase, in this connection, is of great antiquity. Sophocles, in "Oedipus Tyrannus," referring to a calamity involving death throughout a wide district, says: "One man after another thou mightest see speeding toward the shore of the Western God."—Detroit News.

Little Things Important

ALEXANDER PEOPLE INJURED IN CAR ACCIDENT SUNDAY

Mr. and Mrs. Louie Peters and their two adult daughters, of Alexander, were injured when the Paige sedan, driven by the oldest daughter, plunged into the ditch below a hill west of the John Newberger farm, east of Klemme Sunday morning.

The accident happened when the driven discovered a car below the hill, which had just driven onto the highway from a farm lane. Miss Peters in swinging out to th eside of the road misjudged the distance and the Page car went off the shoulder of the road into the ditch, pitching against a fence.

The driver, who is a teacher received a badly cut knee-cap, Mr. Peters' ankle was wrenched. and Mrs. Peters injured her hip. She was later taken to the Hampton hospital to further determine the extent of her injury. The younger daughter was not injured.

The left side and the top of the car was badly damaged.

WARM WATER FOR DAIRY COWS IS ESSENTIAL

Cheaper Than to Make Cows Warm It, Believes Cannon

It is cheaper to heat drinking water for dairy cows during the winter with a tank heater than to require cows to warm it with their body heat, believes C. Y. Cannon, head of the Dairy Husbandry Departement at Iowa State College.

Cows should have plenty of water Not only should the water be warm, but the cows should be watered frequently, especially if they are producing heavily. Low producing and dry cows can stand to be watered once or twice a day, but when they begin to produce heavily they need to be watered much more often.

Investigations show that cows drink on the average about 3½ to 4 gallons of water for each gallon of milk produced. Frequent access to water seems to stimulate the cows to eat more and heavy production requires that they eat large quantities of feed.

Will Address P. T. A.

We understand the program committee of our local P. T. A. has engaged Rev. Sunderlin of Garner to address us at our next meeting Tuesday night. And we are told the high school orchestra directed by Miss Ford will play a few numbers. We anticipate on the same occasion something good to eat. Enough said.

Will Play Crystal Lake

Our boys will play at Crystal Lake next Friday night. They have been osing a few games but have not lost heart. They are a game bunch and will go in and give their best. Let's back them to the limit.

MAN HANGS SELF NORTH OF TOWN

HANCOCK OFFICIALS TRY TO LOCATE RELATIVES

George Fisher, 40 Hung Self At Addis Greiman Farm

Sheriff E. P. Hanson and Frank W. Zeiger, county coroner of Garner, were called to the Addis Greiman farm north of Klemme Sunday about noon to investigate the death of George Fisher, who committed suicide by hanging himself in the machine shed on the Greiman farm.

The young man, who gave his name as George Fisher came to the Greiman farm Friday seeking employment. Mr. Greiman gave him a job cutting wood for a few days while he was trying to find further work for the young man. The man was without funds but seemed a willing worker and was neat in his habits.

While the Greimans were at church Sunday, the man hung himself, the body being found by Mr. Greiman when he came home to do the noon chores.

There were no papers or identifications and little is known of the man, other than information he had given prior to his death. He had come from Germany in 1912, and he claimed to have taken out his first naturalization papers. He was about 40 years old, height 5 ft 7½ inches, fair complexion, dark hair, grey eyes, small scar on chin and also to left of left eye, weight 155 pounds wor cap size 6 3-4, and a dark overcoat.

The body is being held by coroner Zeiger while Sheriff Hanson is making an effort to locate relatives or friends of the dead man.

STEER BURIED FOR SIX WEEKS IN STRAWSTACK, UNEARTHED

While Stewart Oxley and John Riggle were unloading straw from a stask on the Ben Major farm Saturday, they discovered something under the straw. Just as Stewart was about to hit that particular spot with a pitchfork, a steer stuck its head out. The boys immediately dug the animal out, found it too weak to walk and in shape resembling a race horse. The boys found "Uncle Ben", and also secfiured a truck with the expe tation of hauling the animal back to the barn, but by the time they got back the steer had gained enough strength to walk and was found some ten or fifteen rods from the stack and was licking ice. They did not have to haul him. The steer was given water and feed and commenced to gain immediately and at this writing is a quite frisky animal. It is thought that the steer had been buried in the strawstack for over six weeks.—Corwith Hustler.

The mill foreman came upon two darkies walking slowly up the road, single file.

"Say, you, why ain't you worthees niggers working?"

"We'se working, boss, so' nuff. We'se carrying this plank up to the mill."

"What plank? I don't see any plank."

"Well, fo' de Lawd's sake. Abe! Ef we ain't gone and forgot de plank!"

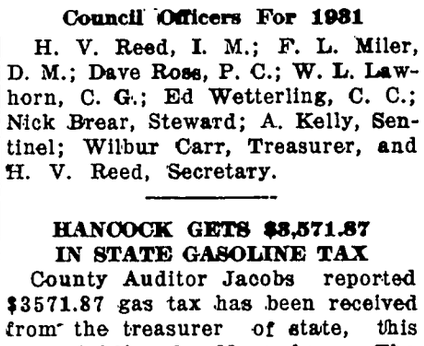
Hints For Homemakers

By Jane Rogers



THESE days when a rigidly economical home menu is frequently a necessity, how to assure maximum health and food value at the least cost is an important problem. A greater use of cereal foods as lunch and supper dishes, as well as for breakfast, is one way to solve it. A dish of cornflakes and cream provides about one and a half times the food value of a serving of sirloin steak, at a fraction of the cost.

Rubbing the edge of the saucepan with butter is a good way to prevent milk from boiling over.

BE CAREFUL

Right now the heating equipment in Klemme homes is working at its peak. That means that danger from destructive fires is greater than at any other season of the year. When January and February are over this danger will be minimized to a large extent—but there will remain several weeks of danger on ahead. Almost every fire that breaks out in a home could have been prevented. In other words, fully 90 percent can be traced to carelessness or neglect in keeping flues, pipes and chimneys in safe and proper condition. Making the stove or furnace safe is the work of but a few minutes, and once it is in good condition frequent inspections should be made to see that it remains that way. Being burned out of house and home is bad enough at any time, but when such a calamity falls in the dead of winter it is terrible.

USING THE CAN OPENER

There's still a generous amount of canning done in Klemme and vicinity during the fruit and vegetable season, so it may come as a surprise to residents of this neighborhood to learn that, taken the country over, canning at home promises to become a lost art. The production of canned goods has increased nearly 500 percent in the past 25 years. But canneries, and not the housewives, are responsible for the increase. A government report of recent date show that canneries turned out 200,000,000 cans of food products last year. Many women still can, but it is more because they like to do so than as a matter of necessity or economy. There is room for argument as to whether it is cheaper to buy food already canned or to can it at home, and since canneries are under government inspection more sanitary and more careful in their choice of products it is also questionable whether or not home-canned food is any better in quality. The American home has undergone many changes in recent years, so news that canning is to pass out along in not come in the nature of a surprise.

HOW TIMES CHANGE

There are still left around, quite a few who can remember that along back 40 years ago beer was 5 cents a glass and lunch was free. Eggs were three dozen for a quarter, and milk was three cents a quart. The butcher gave liver for the cat and treated the kids to bologna. The hired girl was satisfied with $2 a week and did the washing. Women didn't powder or paint, smoke, play bridge or bob their hair. The men wore boots, whiskers, chewed tobacco, spit on the sidwalk, worked eleven hours a day and never went on a strike. Kerosene lamps and photo albums in the parlor were luxuries. No one was operated on for appendicitis or bought monkey glands to restore their youth. The youngsters had some work to do, walked miles to school, wore cotton flannels, minded their parents and were satisfied with what they had. Folks lived ta a good old age and when they did die an automobile had nothing to do with it.

But today its different. Now every body must ride inautos or airplanes play poker and bridge, shoot craps, play the piano with both feet instead of their hands, go to the movies, smoke cigarettes, drink "white mule", wear silks, 'bellyache' about hard times and blame hard times on whatever party happens to be in power. They never go to bed the same day they get up and yet think they're having a wonderful time. This is the age of telephones, telegraph, suffragettes, profiteers, gunmen, highjackers, boyish bobs, boot leggers, excess taxes, prohibition, step-ins and step-outs—and we think we're going some.

THE CASE IN BRIEF

The railroads are not opposing trucks and buses as such. Neither do the railroads desire to put them out of business. What is asked of regulatory bodies is that trucks and bus be required to pay, through taxation their fair share of the cost of constructing and maintaining the highways over which hey operate today at public expense in competition with the railroads which must not only furnish heir own roadbeds on which they pay taxes, but also are taxed in some states to provide the highwaye which are used extensively by trucks and buses for private gain. Such a situation is unfair not alone to the railroads but to the taxpayers.—Rock Island Magazine.

The BEST Gray Hair Remedy is Home Made

To half pint of water add one ounce bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and one-fourth ounce of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. It will gradually darken streaked, faded or gray hair and make it soft and glossy. Barbo will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off.

Early Railroads Cared Little for the Humble

The shades of early third-class travelers ought to smile with satisfaction on hearing the report that first class railway travel is "doomed." The railways were planned for the wealthy. Down to 1845 the third-class passenger had no legal status at all, many companies refused to carry him at any price, while others put him in an open goods truck with movable seats placed across it and charged him 1½ pence a mile for the privilege.

He was conveyed with other unclean animals by cattle-trains, he was shunted about in his bufferless box for hours, and when at last he reached his destination, covered with dust and cinders, it was to see a notice that "the company's servants are strictly ordered not to porter for wagon passengers."

Third-class passengers, nevertheless, persisted in traveling. The companies introduced the "Stanhope." This consisted of a box about 18 feet long, divided into four compartments by two wooden bars crossing each other in the middle. There was a door to each compartment, but no seats, so that the number of passengers it could contain depended upon the bulk of the "Stanhopers." Usually 65 passengers were crowded into a wagon!—Manchester (Eng.) Guardian.

Great Mission Pioneers Revered in California

The mission of Carmel stands as a memorial to Father Ramon Mestres as well as to the great Padre Junipero Serra. Products of different epochs, Padre Serra and Father Mestres were both pioneers, the one in mission founding, the other in rebuilding. Perhaps it was partly due to the fact that Father Mestres' birthplace in Spain was nearby that of Padre Serra that, finding himself pastor of San Carlos at Monterey, he was inspired with the zeal that restored the neighboring Carmel mission from the wreck into which neglect had let it fall. By this restoration Father Mestres served the traditions of his church and the welfare of the state to which he brought back the reminders of the great age of romance of early California.

With every earmark of the aristocrat Father Mestres walked with humility in the footsteps of his great predecessor. Passing on, he leaves a memory of character and achievement as his monument.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Last Mile the Longest

A nurse sat at a desk at the end of a hospital hall, apparently engaged in making a drawing of some sort. An inquisitive fellow-soother of suffering humanity approached. Both had been assigned to the floor used exclusively by the stork. The two talked generalities for a moment, then smilingly observed two men pacing up and down the hall. There were echoes of baby cries from the nearby nursery. Finally the inquisitive one, noting the drawing, said:

"What are you doing, Madge? Making plans for a new home?"

"No," came the reply, "I'm trying to figure out a new hospital containing a race track for prospective fathers!"

World's Fair Weather Voyage

The sea voyage to South Africa is the fair weather voyage of the world. Capetown, once a remote outpost of civilization, is today one of the world's fairest cities. It is not only beautiful and delightfully situated, but the Cape is historical as well, for it was here in 1487 that Dias saw the sea route to India and this incited Columbus, who in his search for India found America instead. Drake describes it as "the fairest Cape in the whole circumference in the world." Few discoveries have influenced the affairs of nations more than the discoveries between 1487 and 1497. This era was truly the dawn after the Dark ages and the first rays lit the Cape when Dias discovered his way around.

He Got His Price

Jimmy's mother stored all the winter bed clothing in a small shed at the back of the house. One day, on returning from downtown, she found that all the bed clothing had disappeared. Without a delay she sought out Jimmy and asked him where they were.

"Do you mean those old mattresses and things?" he asked. "Why, I sold those old things to the rag man!"

His mother, aghast, asked him how much he had received for them.

"Well," replied Jimmy with great satisfaction, "after a lot of arguing I finally got him to give me six cents."—Indianapolis News.

His Nom de Plume Not Original With Clemens

The name "Mark Twain" was first used by an old Mississippi river pilot named Isaiah Sellers, who used to write items for the New Orleans Picayune, in which he told of his adventures in a quaintly egotistical tone. The paragraphs usually began, "My opinion for the benefit of the citizens of New Orleans." They were signed "Mark Twain," which, in the parlance of pilots, is a leadsman's call, meaning two fathoms—twelve feet. Samuel Clemens, then a cub pilot, wrote a burlesque on Captain Seller's articles, and published it in a rival paper over the signature "Sergeant Fathom." Sellers was so hurt by the burlesque that he never wrote another article. In 1863 Clemens was working for the Enterprise, published in Virginia City, Nev. He wanted a good pen name. While he was trying to think of a good one, he received news of the death of Sellers. This suggested to him "Mark Twain," the name Sellers once used, and he signed it first to a letter from Carson City to the Enterprise under date of February 2, 1863.

Bank Notes of Sweden Defy the Counterfeiter

Swedish bank notes offer practically insurmountable difficulties to counterfeiters, because of a secret process used in the manufacture of the bank note paper, at the ancient paper mill of Tumba. The Swedish riksbank, which has been in existence for more than 260 years, and is the oldest institution of its kind in the world, in 1755 purchased the Tumba mill for the manufacture of its bank-note paper.

Since then this paper has been manufactured there by workmen who have passed along the secret of their craft from father to son. A number of processes, which are guarded by the strictest secrecy, are used in the making of the paper, and the bank notes are very carefully printed to avoid all possibility of forgery. Through certain chemical ingredients in the bank-note paper it can even, if burned, be identified from the ashes.—Montreal Family Herald.

Chinese Wisdom

Anent after-dinner speeches, one of the most popular London diplomats was sitting next to his Chinese colleague at a big dinner in London, which was being followed by the usual interminable after-dinner speeches. After listening a while, he turned to his Chinese neighbor, and casually asked:

"And what is your opinion of after-dinner speeches? Do you have them also in China?"

Whereupon the Chinese diplomat calmly and politely replied.

"Oh, yes, of course, we, too, used to have them—but we abolished this habit some 1,500 years ago."

Having attended quite a few dinners, and accompanying speechmakings, we think this story well worth repeating.—London Chronicle.

Ear-Piercing Dying Out

According to the statement of a doctor quoted some time ago, ear-piercing still prevails, but to only a limited extent. "At one time it was believed that piercing the ears and wearing tiny gold rings was a preventive for eye and other troubles. As a matter of fact, however, it is just simply a survival of the period when we were savages and indulged in a primitive style of decoration by mutilation. Between piercing the ears and putting gold rings in the healed-up holes is but a whisper from the present practice of African savages of slitting the lips and by a gradual increasing in the size of objects soon having a hole big enough to slip a plate into."

Origin of "Blue Blood"

Although blood has never been blue, the term "blue blood" has denoted aristocracy for more than 400 years, observes the Golden Book Magazine, which explains the origin of the term.

"Those who claim aristocratic descent have 'blue blood' in their veins, which is meant to be complimentary in a manner of speaking. The expression comes from Spain where, after the expulsion of the Moors, who were dark skinned, people with light skins claimed pure descent from ancestors who lived before the Moorish conquests. The light skins permitted the blue veins to show more vividly."

Still a Surprise

Wilson & Webster received a letter from a London firm. It read: "We are very much surprised that the money we have so often demanded has not yet arrived."

"What shall we do?" said Mr. Wilson.

"Write them a letter," said Mr. Webster.

They wrote a letter, and when the manager of the London firm opened it he read: "You do not need to wonder; we have not sent the money."—London Answers.

Extreme Affection

New expressions of love always brought a repetition from Bobby, to the delight of his father on returning home each evening.

"Bobby," the father greeted him, "I love you so much, it hurts."

Bobby laughed, bestowed a kiss and ran to play. A little later he dashed up to his father and said: "Daddy, I love you so much, it's sore."

WHAT OF THE BIRDS?

Humanity hasn't anything more valuable than the birds. And yet we shiver and complain of harsh winter winds and forget them. Ifwe are made uncomfortable, what about the little feathered fellows that are so often deprived of not only something to eat but of shelter as well. Take them away and in a few years we would be living in a desolate waste, for insects, now destroyed by the birds, would be left free to destroy our crops, our vegetables, our grass and trees. There is not a home around Klemme in which crumbs of bread do not gather from one meal to another. As a general rule they are carried out and disposed of without o thought of the birds. That's wrong. Don't forget that your good friends out in the fields and trees need those crumbs—so throw them out to them. Do it regularly and next spring when you see them warring on insects you will realize how well they are rewarding you for your thoughtfulness.

The Oldest Daughter is Character. Some of the sisters are: Care, Cheerfulness, Loyalty, Courtesy, Economy, Sincerity, The baby is opportunity. Get acquainted with the "old man" and you will be able to get along pretty well with the rest of the family. —Hammermill Bond.

She: "John, did you mail that letter I gave you?"

John: "Yes, mam. I remember very distinctly mailing it in the first mail box I came to. You can see for yourself that it isn't in any of my pockets."

She: "That will do, John. I gave you no letter to mail."

"And how is your husband getting on with his reducing exercises, Mrs. Neuquids?."

"You,d be surprised—that battleship 'e 'ad tattoed on his chest is now only a row boat."

An Englishman on a visit to the west decided to go horseback riding The hostler who was to attend him asked: "Do you prefer an English saddle or a western?"

"What's the difference?" he asked.

"The western saddle has a horn," replied the attendant.

"I don't think I'll need the horn, replied the Englishman. "I don't intend to ride in heavy traffic."

Little Girl: "I'm not going to play with Johnnie any more."

Mother: "Why what's the mater? I thought you and Johnnie were good friends."

Little Girl: "We were, but we were playing a game and he kicked me in the stomach when I had my back turned toward him."

WHO'S WHO IN THE CENTRAL STATES ELECTRIC COMPANY

(From "Along the Line", Published by Central States Electric Company

The subject of this sketch is W. E. Klingaman, manager of the Garner division. When we asked him for a picture and some information about his business career, he admitted that he hadn't had a picture taken for over 30 years and what information he gave us was included in eight typewritten lines.

This is typical of Walt, as he is noted for his modesty and is always so occupied with what he is doing that he doesn't have time to think about himself. This hae been true of his whole business career as he has always been so busy taking care of his job tnat he hasn't had time to find fault or think about getting another one.

He was born and raised on a farm near Waterloo, where he was living at the time of his great adventure —the Spanish American war. He enlisted in the regiment commanded by Col. William G. Dows, late president of our Company, and served 13 months during the war. Like all of his jobs he did it well. He then worked in the telephone business at Waterloo and Vinton until 1893, when he was appointed as superintendent of the electric and water departments at Vinton, Iowa. It is not necessary to say anything about his success in that position for his 27 years of continuous service under a large number of different city administrations, we believe, is ample proof of his ability to handle the public satisfactorily and well, and is a record which few public officials can equal.

In 1920 he resigned his position in Vinton and went to Canada to try his luck at farming, but after two years returned to the utility business and went to work for the Central States Electric company as manager of the Garner division, which position he still holds.

During his connection with our company, Walt has won a host of friends for himself and for the company. He is aways genial in his manner and concientious in his work. His goal is to give everyone on his territory that fair and courteous treatment which has made his long career in the utility industry a marked success. There is no one in the community where he lives and works that has its interest more at heart than he has, and that is more willing to give his time and efforts in furthering any cause that would be for its benefit.

MANY DUTIES OCCUPY TIME OF STATE POLICE

Des Moines, Ia., Jan. 14 Special Duties of state police forces, the establishment of which in Iowa is being urged, range from the enforcement of proper automobile driving regulations to the pursuit of murderers and other criminals, according to a summary of state police activities made before the annual meeting of the Iowa State Sheriff's Association here recently.

By far the largest amount of activity on the part of various state police force centers around state highway patrol duty, it was revealed. Included in this category state police preform the following duties: Enforcement of proper driving regulations. Educating motorists on traffic laws and regulations, Enforcing parking ordinances on state highways, Checking up on weight of suspected overloaded trucks, speeding up slow moving cars causing traffic hazzards, Keeping traffic movng at an orderly pace, checking up on road hogging and reckless driving. checking up accidents on highways, Escorting school buses and protecting children to and from school, rendering first aid to injured. checking up licenses, Giving information to tourist regarding roads, camps, etc.

Pursuit and apprehension of murderers, bank bandits, highway robbers and other criminals of the more dangerous sort is not the only important phase of state police activity, for these crimes are far outnumbered by those against farm property and crops. In those states having state constabularies, the patrolmen have shown marked success in decreasing such petty thievery and annually recover many hundreds of thousands of dollars for farmers and other property holders. Recovery of stolen cars is another big item in state police force records. State police also aid in patroling large gatherings, airports, fair grounds, and often substitute for local constables when the latter are required to appear in court or are ill.

The mere fact that highways are known to be patrolled has done much to prevent automobile accidents and reckless driving, it is asserted. That the presence of state police in a vicinity is a deterrent on crime has been conclusively proved advocates of state police force in Iowa point out.

A wise man will make more opportunities than he finds.—Bacon.

TRANSATLANTIC AVIATOR LIVED IN DENISON

In 1902 a group of irate citizens of Denison met to condemn one Elize Chamberlain and that infernal contraption his son, Clarence, drives through the streets. Twenty five years later, on August 18, 1927, an exremely calm, good humored and self possessed hero stepped from a private car to receive a rousing home town welcome. The career of Clarence Chamberlain, a story of countless disapointments, of hopes deferred and plans continually thwarted, is told by Dorothy Wagner in the September, 1930 number of "The Palimpsest", published by the State Historical Society of Iowa.

On June 4, 1927, the Bellanca plane, Columbia, roared out over Long Island, its destination unknown. Charles A. Levine accompanied Chamberlain as co-pilot. Near Cape Cod their expensive earth inductor compass went out completely and it was necessary to rely on the old magnetic compass. Dusk of the second day found the Columbia over Land's End, Englang where heavy clouds forced Chamberlain to ascend until his plane had reached her limit of slightly over 20.000 feet. Chilled and exhausted by the unusual strain of handling the Columbia, he turned over the controls to his partner while he snatched some rest on te gas tank.

Fifteen minutes later, Levine, hopelessly bewildered and confused shot the Columbia downward in a dizzy spiral. (Awakened by the violent pitching of the plane, Chamberlain worked desperately but the altimeter fell from 21,000 to 4,000 feet before the Columbia was again under contro.

A bone-dry gas tank forced Chamberlin to land in a wheat field near Eiselben, Germany, at 6 A. M., on June 6th. The Columbia had been in the air forty three hours and exceeded Lindbergh's long distance flying record by nearly 300 miles.

Touzalin—I hear that Dr. Cheatem isn't going to take any more vacations.

Foozello—No, after he got back from his vacation this summer almost all his patients were well.

Fake—Lucinda paints and powders a good deal, doesn't she?

Bosch—Yes, when you kiss her it's just like eating a marshmallow.

Both Mistaken

A pompous man missed his silk handkerchief and accused an Irishman of stealing it. After some confusion the man found the handkerchief in his pocket and apologized for having accused the Irishman.

"Never mind at all," said the latter. "Ye thought I was a thafe, and I thought you was a gentleman an' we are both mistaken."—Illinois Central Magazine.

Klemme Scouts for the past two weeks have worked on Nature Study and First Aid.

To Master Metal Craft

Saturday night a number of local Scouts went to Mason City to work on swimming instruction and tests. A couple Scouts are nearly ready for their Merit Badge in Swimming.

HISTORIC GARNER BUILDING BURNS

Flames Destroy Structure, Once College and Later Skating Rink

GARNER— One of the most historical buildings in Garner—known as the old Garner academy and formerly a college structure—was destroyed by flames early Monday morning. Minature golf and roller skating rink equipment in she place was valued at $2,200. The total loss, it has been estimated, was $5,000. This academy, a large frame structure, was built more than 50 years ago. The first proffessor was the Rev. S. A. Lindsey. In 1890 it was changed from a college to a commercial and normal school. L. W. Pollock as president took charge and F. W. Worden was vice president. Fifteen years ago it was turned into a movie house. T. J. Caldwell later bought the building aud installed a minature golf course on the second floor and a roller skating rink on the first floor. The fire was discovered about 12 o'clock and had made much headway.

PRESERVING SOME HISTORICAL TREES

Washington, D. C.— Officers of the National Society of the D. A. R. early this year will designate another American tree which is worthy of preservation because of its historical importance.

This action will be taken in accordance with the Society's purpose to maintain living memorials between the present and the past. The chosen tree will be treated by Davey Tree Surgeons whose services are donated by former Congressman Martin L. Davey.

One tree a year is thus to be preserved and all the trees that have been saved for posterity are to be kept in good health insofar as possibl. Unfortunately, many of the nations most historic trees have been the victims of neglect and some of them are in such condition that their duration of life is necessarily limited.

The famous Land Office elm at Marietta, O., thought to be the oldest in that state, was restored last year. So poor was the condition of the patient that a major 'operation' was necessary. The tree was standing when the first permanent English settlement was made in the Northwest territory. Shading the land office, where final settlements were made of Revolutionary war scrip, and allotments of bounty lands were made and plats recorded the tree was tied up with all the hopes and fortunes of the pioneers in Ohio.

Hints For Homemakers

By Jane Rogers

IN selecting oranges for beverage purposes, or for any purpose in which the amount of juice is particularly important, remember that some varieties are much juicier than others. Size for size, the heavier fruit is always the juicier.

It's often helpful to have firmly fixed in your memory a few of the standard kitchen measures. One salt spoon equals three-quarters of a teaspoon; three teaspoons equal one tablespoon; sixteen tablespoons equal one cup; two cups equal one pint.

The BEST Gray Hair Remedy is Home Made

To half pint of water add one ounce bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and one-fourth ounce of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. It will gradually darken streaked, faded or gray hair and make it soft and glossy. Barbo will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off.

SOYBEANS GREAT FOR COWS

Cracked Beans or Soybean Oilmeal One of Best Protein Feeds

Cracked soybeans and soybean oilmeal are among the very best protein supplements for dairy cows. This fact has been demonstrated by numerous experiments carried on in various states, reports Dr. C. Y. Cannon, head of the dairy husbandry work at Iowa State College. who has been looking into this matter.

Soybeans have been unusually low in price and there appears to be a surplus of beans in some regions. The "infant" soybean mill at Centerville is fearing that unless a market is found for the soybean oilmeal or the beans at a satisfactory price, enough farmers will cease growing beans to make operation of the mill impractical.

Soybeans cracked or soybean oilmeal, is at least equal if not superior to linseed or cottonseed oilmeal according to work at the Iowa Station and other experiment stations, for dairy cows, Dr. Cannon finds. Consequently, when soybean oilmeal or cracked beans can be obtained as cheaply o rat a lower price than cottonseed or linseed oilmeal, the Iowa product should be chosen.

Soybeans or soybean oilmeal, if sweet, are highly palatable to dairy cows and in all ways seem a most excellent protein supplement for the dairy ration.

POULTRY IN POOR CONDITION

May Affect Quality of Hatching Eggs and Next Spring's Chick Crop, Whitfield Says

Many Iowa flocks are in poor condition to produce hatching eggs because they have received poor feed and care during the past season when egg and poultry prices have been low, says W. R. Whitfield, poultry specialist in the Extension Service, Iowa State College.

Steps should be taken immediately to put the hens in good condition if the home flock is to be used as a source of hatching eggs.

Old hens, coming two years or older, produce larger eggs with stronger hatchability than pullets. The chicks also inherit a certain degree of longevity which is not insured when they are hatched from pullet eggs.

Hens should be in good feather and well fleshed. This is also true of the cockerels. Special care must be taken to see that the male birds have enough to eat. Sometimes the cockerel can not eat out of ordinary hoppers, miss out on the grain feeding and suffer from lack of feed. This possibility is one which few poultry farmers recognize, according to Mr. Whitfield.

In order to secure eggs of high fertility both early and late in the season one male should be applied to every 12 hens in the flock. They should be with the females three weeks or more before the eggs are to be used for hatching.

Soundness of shell, the heaviness of the white annd a degree of color in the yolk indicates whether or not the hens are getting adequate foods of all kinds. Plenty of water should be supplied since the production of every dozen eggs means that 12 hen have drunk a pint more water than they need for body uses.

SOILS MEETINGS TO BE HELD IN COUNTY NEXT WEEK

J. L. Boatman. Ames Specialist To Hold Several Meetings

Through this artiole, may I rfeer you to the series of Soils meetings which will be held in this county all next week? Mr. J. L. Boatman, Soils Specialist from the Extension Service of Ames, will conduct these meetings and has a lesson very worth while for every farmer in the county. A seperate article in this paper will furnish additional data on the meetings.

Now 4-H Club Is Planned

An entirely new 4-H club will be organized this year if sufficient interest is manifested. The club I refer to is that of a Ton Litter. Can you imagine the interest that would be taken in a group of Ton Litters lined up at the Achievement Show this fall. Alvin Meinecke is the first boy to enter this club and states they will have to go some to beat him as he is out to win. This club is, no doubt, very practical and one that certainly should teach the boys and girls how to best feed hogs for an early market. All of you know that if your pig crop is ready for the market six months after farrowing they reach the market when it is the highest.

Should Sign Up For Club Now

Write, call or come to the Farm Bureau office and sign up for this club and obtain a sow that will farrow as soon after the first of March as possible. To enter this club the sow cannot farrow before the first of March. If sufficient enrollment is obtained in this club I am sure that attractive prizes can be secured for the winners at the Achievement Show.

Will Have Corn and Grain Show

The big Corn and Small Grain Show in connection with the Farmers Institute to be held at Garner Feb. 12 and 13 is not far away so right now you should select the corn and small grain samples that you are going to exhibit. Aside from the exhibits much talent will be found on the program. The women as well as the men are to be taken care of during the two days of the Institute.

Prominent Men On Program

The first day will find Dewey Termohlen, poultry specialist, Wm. Watkins, Crops Specialist, and R. H. Port, Extension Plant Pathologist on the program with messages that should be heard by every one. The Thursday evening program has not been fully arranged, but will be announced in dne time.

Galloway Is On Program

Friday, the 13th, will be taken up with the crop outlook for the year 1931 with J. C. Galloway in charge R. K. Bliss, Director of the Extension Service will be on the program for Friday evening and for those who have not heard the director a real treat is in store and those that have will certainly want to hear him again.

In closing, may I suggest that if at all possible you should attend at least one day of the annual Farm and Home week at Ames, Feb. 2 to 7. For those especially interested in horses, Wed. Feb. 4 is "Horse Day" Colt Club members, I am sure, would more than enjoy this day at Ames.

KLEMME WINS ROUGH BATTLE WITH CRYSTAL LAKE

Locals Have Large Lead At Start of Game

The local independent team journeyed to Crystal Lake last Friday and succeeded in winning, 27 to 26. The locals took a lead early in the game and the first quarter ended 14-1 in Klemme s favor and the half 18-10. Continued substitution on the part of Crystal Lake threw the locals off for a while and may be responsible for the closeness of the score at the end of the game. It was perhaps one of the roughest games played this season by the locals.

This was the last game that the center, Frank Gibbs, will play this year as he has gone back to college. However another man has been found to take his place.

Return Game At Thompson Friday

Friday evening of this week the "Red Devils journey to Thompson for a return game with the "Couriers." Klemme defeated them on the local floor 27-19. The high school plays at Thompson the same night so why not go along and support the local teams?

Mrs. Josephine Arnquist -Blake, State Leader of 4-H Girls Club Work, told in her talk how the club girls and leaders of Hancock County had set a precedent of being a standard 4-H girls club county. DOINGS AT SCHOOL THE PAST WEEK

LOCAL DECLAMATORY CONTEST WILL BE HELD NEXT WEEK

Thirteen Speakers Will Appear In This First Contest

On next Tuesday evening 13 of our young people will compete here for the priviledge of representing our high school in two later declam atory contests, one here next week and another at Garner on February 23. There will be five speakers in the oratorical contest and four each in the dramatic and humorous divisions. Mrs. McFarlane of Clear Lake will be here for another day or two before and after our local contest. She is now at work at Belmond coaching contestants.

Next Tuesday night,s program will be public and a charge of 25 and 35 cents will be made for admission. We believe this will be one of the very best local declamatory contests ever held in Klemme. Com petition will be strong and whoever wins will need to be at his best and to give a good account of himself.

Our seconds will speak later in a sub contest and our first will compete against three other schools for state honors.

Goodell boys were given the use of our gymnasium an hour or more Tuesday evening after school in preparation for a game here at a later date. They are trying to get in condition for the tournament at Britt and must depend on the generosity of other schools who have agreed to share some time with them for practice. They have been invited to Kanawha also for some practice We are glad for the interest Goodell is showing in this winter school sport and hope the boys there may have the pleasure in participating this spring in several games.

Our team will play a return game against Thompson on next Friday night. We understand our town team is scheduled to play there on the same evening.

Our boys lost to Swaldale by but three points last Friday night after being tied with them for a considerable portion of the game period.

The coach and his wife and the superintendent were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Jorgenson on Monday night of last week. After a good dinner we were privileged to ride with them to Garner to a joint installation of the Masonic Order and Eastrn Star. The occasion was one we enjoyed very much after a strenuous close of a semester of school work. Many others from Klemme were at Garner the same evening; some were installed as officers.

Our school faculty were invited to a six o'clock dinner and evening of games at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Kudje on Saturday night of last week. We had a rare good time. It was a short Saturday evening.

We have not yet given up the school band. We believe it is still possible to get the required number to keep it going. We urge all interested to send us a check for the usual amount payable to the band fund, to be returned to them in case we fail to get the required number. This should interest everybody who can appreciate the value of a band to any town the size of ours. Boys will be active at something we may be sure and unless they are interested in and provided a really worthwhile form of activity their time may be worse than wasted along other lines. Can they be better employed during their leisure moments than in learing to play a musical instrument? We believe both for the sake of our town and the boys themselves parents of children of musical ability might well make some sacrifice toward making this band a permanent institution. Let's get it going next week for another twelve nights.

Man is but a reed, the weakest in nature, but he is a thinking reed—Blaise Pascal.

ANNUAL CREAMERY MEETING THURSDAY, FEB. 5

Klemme Creamery Has Remarkable Record For Past Year

It will be of real interest to the large number of patrons and friends of the Klemme Co-Operative Creamery Company to know that the year just closed was the largest in the history of the creamery.

Nearly two million pounds of were taken in at the weigh room door. This vast amount of raw material was manufacturd in 655,158 pounds of delicious, pure butter.

This was a large gain in the amount of cream received and amount of butter made, despite the fact that the average price of butterfat fell below the price of the previous year. Naturally the cream checks were smaller for a like amount of cream, which was rather discouraging to the farmers.

Farmer patrons and businessmen will be interested in reading over the Annual Report for the year of 1930, published in this issue. Note the net value of the plant and the equipment, as compared to the plant in the beginning; add to this the sinking fund and surplus which brings the total asstes to double what they were in the beginning.

The date for the annual meeting has been set for Thursday, February 5th, 1931. All should attend and boost for th best interests of the local creamery.

Why Kick

About The Hog Market?

Now is the time that you should be thinking about what kind of a home are you going to give that early Brood Sow. Do you think that she will be a Money Maker for you if you just put her most any kind of a pen and let her and the little pigs make a go of it if they can?

This early sow is the one that you should be worrying over. She is the one that will make you more money than the sow that has her litter along in April or May.

Make arrangements to take care of the early sows, get them in nice sunlit pens where the little ones have a chance to get exercise and a place to lay in the direct sunlight.
Maybe with a few sash you could fix up a few pens that would be ideal for the raising of early pigs.

Come in and let us show you our small hog houses. We can make you a proposition if you have or will get the early bred sows that will make it easy for you to get started producing September market hogs.

Don't let the $2.50 to $3.00 per hundred get away from you just on account that you have to have the hogs on the market by September 1—

GET BUSY! ACT NOW!

COME IN AND SEE OUR LAY OUT!

P LIVE STOCK OFF CLOVER AND ALFALFA FIELDS

ch Harm Can Result From The Tramping Over Soft Fields

Farmers should make a special rt to keep livestock off from lfa and clover fields during Feby. Due to the thawing weather tramping will do much more m than good at this particular e of the year. Right now is a d time to make arrangements to your new alfalfa seeding this ng. Due to the freezing and wing the ground heaves, thus roots are torn loose from the und causing poor stands. The ly rolling will pack the dirt und the roots again thereby savyour stand.

Now too is the time to order alfalfa and clover seed for ng seeding. It stands to reason t if you wait until late you proly will get poorer seed due to fact that the good seed may be gone. Another thing, be sure t you get your seed thru a reble company. Get certified seed that you will not be buying Canthistle and Quack Grass or ny other noxious weeds in your ver and alfalfa. Legume seed in past has been one of the sources many noxious weeds.

irst test ground to see if you can w a legume, then test the seed. is much better to test the seed ore it is sown than after it is own.

The month of February is the e to prune your fruit trees, all fruits and grapes. The young it tree should be properly trainor shaped.

If your dairy or beef calves are ubled with lice, and many are, I uld suggest that you get some und sabadilla seed and flowers sulphur. Mix these about one rt of sabadilla seed to one ree parts flower of sulphur and t it on the animals, especially tween the legs and over the shoul rs. Applying linseed oil to the ested area also helps or you can sh with a good coal tar solution. owver, you must be careful of the ather if you wash with solution. e treatment should be repeated about ten days or two weeks.

KLEMME POOL HALL LACKS A PROPRIETOR NOW

Looks Like Some Klemme People Are "Holding The Sack"

Up to this date Pete Culver, formerly proprietor of the pool hall, has been conspicuous by his absence since a week ago last Monday.

A few days prior to that time, to be exact, Saturday, his wife Mrs. Culver left town with the family furniture. Monday Culver sold his "Snack Shack" restaurant to a Mr. C. B. Bagley which the Times told of last week. It is understood Mr. Bagley traded a 1928 Chevrolet coach and $75 for the "Shack." It was probably $75 and a Chevrolet too much at that for the business.

Getting back to the Culver end of the story again. Culver turned his keys over to "Slim" Anderson and told him to run the pool hall for a few days until he, Culver, came back. "Slim" received a letter in a few days from Culver mailed at Des Moines, stating Culver would be back by the end of the week.

However, our town dads decided Culver was not sincere, so they had the pool hall closed, as he had neglected to pay his license for 1931. Likewise it was learned that Culver was back on his rent. Another small item was the fact that Culver had also forgotten to pay for some coal at the Farmers Elevator. In a way he paid for it, but the check he gave came back "Insufficient Funds." However Allie White got what coal was left at the pool hall.

We are also informed there were a few other business transactions Mr. Culver neglected to straighten out before he left town

Now to get back to the restaurant deal. Mr. Bradley probably purchased the business in good faith, but after running the place for a week found it was a "lemon." The family pulled out Monday and from what we can learn their destination was Dows.

What little there was left in the "Snack Shack" was taken over by the Northern Lumber Co., which included a home-made counter and the "Snack Shack" sign.

And so ends the history of the pool hall under it's last proprietor. The town is out for part of the pool table license, the owner of the building is out some rent, and we understand others are "holding the sack" for unpaid accounts.

WELL DRILLERS DELAYED BY LOSS OF DRILL SATURDAY

The men who are drilling the town well here for Thorpe Bros. of Des Moines, had a tough break Saturday when their drill came uncoupled and fell into the well, which had been sunk to a depth of about 80 feet.

The men went to Des Moines to get tools to fish out the lost drill. Tuesday morning they succeeded in snaring the lost equipment, and are again drilling every day.

SUPERVISOR KILLED IN CAR MISHAP

FRANK J. URICH DIED FOLLOWING ACCIDENT NEAR HERE

Died Of Burns From Explosion In His Car Southeast Of Klemme

Frank J. Urich, Supervisor for this part of the county, and who lived at Garner, died Friday noon of burns received when his car caught fire from an explosion while driving north of the road past the Mrs. Church farm southeast of this place, about 1 o'clock last Thursday afternoon.

Found By Henry Ward

Henry Ward, who lives but a few rods from where Mr. Urich was found, discovered the car in a ditch when he was going for his mail. The Urich car had gone down a very steep bank into the ditch, but had not turned over. Mr. Ward discovered the semi-unconscious form of Mr. Urich as he opened the car door to ascrtain what was wrong. As he did so the back cushion of the car began to blaze. Mr. Ward attempted to drag Mr. Urich out of the car but could not as Urich was a large man and was wedged in the front seat. Mr. Ward succeeded in putting out the fire by throwing the seat cushion out and taring away the burning upholstery. After extinguishing the flames in the car Ward secured the help of Burr Church, who brought Mr. Urich to Klemme in the Urich car. Mr. Urich was given treatment by local doctors, who stated his burns were very serious. Mr. Urich was later taken to his home at Garner, and from there taken to a Mason City hospital. He was severely burned about his head and face, and both hands. He died about noon Friday.

Trys To Tell Of Accident

As to the exact cause of the accident which caused Mr. Urich to lose his life, is not known.

It seems that Mr. Urich had car trouble a few miles south and had stopped to ascertain the cause, finding something wrong with the gasoline line, and in fixing it had used a rag to wipe the gasoline line off. The rag was thrown back into the car and Mr. Urich drove on after making the repair. It was when he was near the Ward farm that an explosion must have occured, burning Mr. Urich's face and hands and causing him to lose control of his car.

Funeral Services Held Monday

Funeral services for Mr. Urich were held at St. Boniface Catholic Church at Garner Monday morning at 9 o'clock by Rev. Fr. Manternach and burial was in St. Boniface cemetery west of Garner.

Mr. Urich was serving his second term as supervisor, and was recently appointed to this district.

INDEPENDENT TEAM LOSES TWO GAMES

Have Won Six Out Oof Nine Games Played This Season

Last Friday night the Klemme town team drove to Thompson and were deafeated 49-19. The "Couriers". proved to be to much for the remainder of the local team who are very much crippled thru the loss of their star guard, Luther Tanner, who was taken to the hospital to have his appendix removed last Wednesday. and their center Frank Gibbs who returned to college the first of last week. Efforts that have been made to fill their places have not met with perfect success.

Orville Stokesbary, high point man of the team, Kermit Koerner, Otho Keraus and Robert Tanner the remaining players of the original squad. Marion Carson, Clair West and Leo Brown are the local players who have been added to the team and "Chuck" Basely and "Louie" Yepson of Kanawha have played the last two games with the "Red Devils".

The locals were defeated Monday night at Kanawha 49-19. It was more of a fun fest than a basket ball game for the local boys. It was perhaps the last game the locals will play this year unless a county tournament is held. However it will still be possible to get a team together to play any town that should happen to want a game.

The "Red Devils" are undefeated on their home floor this season and have lost but three gamesout of the nine played this season.

LEMME SHIPS CAR OF FOOD TO ARK.

AR LOAD OF FOOD LEFT FOR STRICKEN AREA TODAY

Contained A fariety Of Food Shipped Direct To Arkansas

A car load of food was shipped t of Klemme this afternoon direct Little Rock. Arkansas, there to distributed where most needed r people who are starving in the ought stricken area.

The work of gathering food and ading the car was one of the fast- and greatest jobs this commun- has ever before attempted. It s the greatest drive ever accom- hed in Hancock County, and the ople of Klemme and vicinity are be highly complimented in this dertaking to serve humanity. It the only car load of food stuffs ipped out of Hancock County. A ipment of eggs left Garner last ek, but as far as the Times can arn Klemme and vicinity are the ly ones in Hancock County to re- pond to the call by shipping a big ar load of all kinds of food to Ar- ansas.

A small group of farmers and a w citizens and business men of lemme met late Saturday evening talk over plans of sending a re- ef car load of food to Arkansas. his group of men selected a few her men in the neighborhood and otified them to meet Sunday after- oon. At this meeting two men in ch school district in the surround- g townships were named and noti- ed of their part in the work. Gen- al telephone calls were snt out nd Monday forenoon the entire mmunity had been canvassed. The ar had hardly been spotted in the al yards before farmers began to rive Monday morning with their ther contributions.

Car Is Filled Tuesday Evening

Food continued to pour into the ar throughout Monday and Tues- ay, and by evening the car was al- ost full.

The list of contributors and the st of articles in the car have not een compiled, but the entire list ill be published next week. The ar was packed with everything im- ginary, including over 160 sacks of our, over 25 cases of eggs; about 00 pounds of bacon; over 1,000 ounds of corn meal; 8 or 10 sacks f beans and numerous bags of po- atoes, rice, onions. etc.; and case fter case of evaporated milk, soda, runes, and all kinds of canned oods, boney, dry goods, lard, sev- ral tubs of butter, several sacks of alt, many jars of home canned veg- tables, meat and fruits, and many other items. The total weight of he goods was approximately 20,128 ounds, or over ten tons! The esti- nated value was between $2,000 nd $2,500.

Klemme Man May Go To Arkansas

Enthusiasm was running high in Klemme today and it has been sug- gested, and meets with much favor, that some Klemme man should go to Little Rock and meet the car, to follow it on its mission of feeding those in need, and get first hand in- formation on the Arkansas situation and see just how the relief work is carried on there. Several have sig- nified their intentions of subscrib- ing to a fund to send a man down there. No doubt this will be done.

Thanks To Everybody!

The committees in charge of the work in Klemme and vicinity want to take this opportunity of thank- ing all of those who so willingly responded to the call by contribut- ing food, money, grain etc., and to all those men in the community who devoted their time to make the al such a success. It was a spirit of co-operation and a at was accomplished. Thanks verybody who helped in any e Times is compiling the list of ibutors who helped fill the car Arkansas. Another list is be- ompiled of what went into the All names will be published, but not what was contributed, that would fill a volume. An accurate check has been kept of all receipts and expenditures, and an honest effort was made by business men to keep a list of contributors. All of this will be compiled in book form and will be made a permanent re- cord and filed with the town Clerk and will be a public record and open to anyone interested.

THORPE BROS. COMPLETED NEW WELL FOR KLEMME

Equipment Loaded And Shipped To Des Moines Today

Thorpe Bros. Well Co. of Des Moines, who had the contract for drilling a new well for the Town of Klemme, have completed their job and moved the equipment today.

Test Over 100 Gal. Per Minute

Pumping tests were conducted for about twenty-four hours to de- termine if the well would produce the water necessary to pass the re- quirements of the State Board. The well tested out above the amount required and showed around 106 gallons per minute. The contract called for a 100 gal. per minute well.

Is 164.7 Feet In Depth

The new well. which is twelve ches in diameter at then stepped off to ten inches lower down was drilled at a cost of $6.50 per foot. The town pays for the casing and the well as it was turn- ed over cost $1,675.00.

The councilmen are looking over pumps of various kinds. A rotary pump will probably be installed.

With the new well in operation Klemme will have an adequate sup- ply of water for any imergency.

At the present time about 10,500 gallons of water is used in Klemme daily.

W. C. KERAUS ATTENDS MEETING OF INSURANCE AGENTS

Agents From 8 States Meet At Waterloo For Two Day Session

W. C. Keraus left early Tuesday morning, picked up Elmer Elling at Garner and with several other agent from Mason City went to attend a two day regional meeting of Equit- able Life Insurance agents at the Russel Lampson hotel in Waterloo, Iowa.

The meeting convened at 9:15 Tuesday morning and included only licensed agents from Minnesota, South Dakota and Iowa.

Dr. Rockwell, who is probably the most favorably known instructor in life insurance lectured at the meet- ing.

ERNEST HENSCHEN IS NEW POOL HALL PROPRIETOR

Ernest Henschen, farmer resid- ing between Klemme and Garner, closed a deal with C. F. Thompson. Saturday, whereby he took over the pool hall equipment on which Thompson had just closed out at a Sheriff's sale. Mr. Thompson had some months ago sold the pool hall to Pete Culver, who a few weeks a- go left town.

"Ernie" is well known here, and we believe he will run a good, clean pace of amusement. We wish him success.

BUNTENBACH'S SALE FRIDAY

Friday of this week E. C. Bun- tenbach will have a sale on the farm 2¼ miles east of Klemme. This will be the largest farm sale held in Hancock County this year.

The sale is scheduled to start t 12 o'clock noon.

Included in the 275 head of live- stock are 16 head of horses; 150 head of cattle, and 95 head of hogs. The farm machinery is the most complete line offered on a sale this year, and is all in excellent shape.

W. J. Murphy of Mason City and B. A. Reemtsma, of Klemme, are the auctioneers. The First Nation- al Bank will clerk the sale.

AROUND THE COUNTY WITH AGENT WEISS

CORN AND GRAIN SHOULD BE TREATED, SAYS AGENT

Grain And Corn Is Easily Treated On The Farm

Farmers, may I urge that you not sow any small grain or plant any corn unless it has been treated. Now is the time to think about treating your small grain so may I suggest that right now is the best time to make a barrel seed treatment mach- ine. The old type barrel butter churn makes a good seed treating machine. however, you would want a 50 gallon barrel and not the small butter barrels.

Pruning Is Very Important

Many farmers are complaining that their orchard did not bear fruit as well as expected and I believe that the trouble lies with the owner of the orchard. In order to produce well, it is absolutely essential to prune your orchard; if not every year, for sure every other year. If the fruit tree is not pruned all the plant material goes to develop water sprots and wood growth in- stead of fruit. In the orchards I saw at least one-third to one-half of the wood should be removed.

Will Examine Farm Records

J. C. Galloway, Farm Record Specialist from the Extension Ser- vice, will be in the county March 2, 3 and 4 to analyze the Farm Re- cords for those who have kept them in 1930. He will also help anyone start that is interested in keeping a farm record. Remember that no other business is conducted without keeping a complete set of books so why should not the farmer know where the leaks in his farm opera- tion are? To find out he must keep records.

Landscape Man Coming Again

E. J. Johnson, Landscape Special- ist from the Extension Service will be in the county Feb. 23-27 conduct ing the fifth of a series of six Farmstead Improvement lessons. Anyone is welcome to attend the meetings which are held at Garner on Monday, Klemme on Tuesday, Corwith on Wednesday, Woden on Thursday and Britt on Friday. The meetings start promptly at 10:00.

Bulletins Are Now On Hand

Since the series of soil meetings held in this county. I have a num- ber of extension bulletins No. 168 on Alfalfa in Iowa, which I shall be glad to furnish to any that will write or call for them.

Ton Litter Club Developing

The Ton Litter club seems to be quite popular as the enrollment is increasing slow but sure. May I urge the boys and girls to enroll in one or all of the following clubs: Ton Litter, Market Pig, Dairy Heif- er, Sow and Litter, Ewe and Lamb and colt. Let me hear from you in regard to enrollment in 4-H club work as there is no better time to do so than right now.

County Institute Was Held

The County Institute held the past week was, by far, the best at- tended of any Institute to date. Harry Linn with his colt breaking demonstration attracted 200 farm- ers to the L. L. Gilbert farm and everyone present went away feeling muc more confident about that colt at home that had to be broke this spring.

The corn and small grain exhib- its were double those of last year with much better quality.

S. H. Thompson and R. H. Por- ter on Marketing and Weed Eradi- cation respectively. were very well received Thursday evening with a capacity crowd

The Outlook Conference Friday was very well attended and a great amount of information was taken away by those in attendance.

Prof. J. C. Cunningham of Ames kept the audience rocking with laughter throughout his entire ill- ustrated lecture on Countries of Europe. His was a fitting climax to the best institute yet held .

GOINGS AT SCHOOL THE PAST WEEK

PARENT TEACHER MEETING ON TUESDAY WELL ATTENDED

Interesting Topics Were Discussed Pro And Con At Meeting

There was a very good attend- ance at our P. T. A. program on Tuesday evening of this week. The music was furnished by our high school girls glee club and by Miss Violet Wolford, of Clear Lake, who sang two numbers. Interesting pap- ers were read by Miss Adelia Strom er and by Mrs. R. J. Hughes. An interesting discussion was invoked by a question submitted for the fac ulty to answer. It was "Ought not our state course of study be follow- ed more closely." The point was made by some of our parents that some of our classes should be com- pelled to cover more ground than they now do. The reply was that it is better to cover less ground and permit a greater number of the student to comprehend that covered The parents replied that more home study should be demanded. We are glad for this interest on the part of some of our parents for more work on the part of of students. It is the disappointment of many teachers that so little home study can be persuaded of high school students But just who is to blame? Are par- ents insisting on their children studying at home an hour or two each evening? We wish they would If all did, our achievements would be much greater. Some protestedag- ainst failing students but not all students can progress at the same rate of speed and if the speed is suited to the "A" and "B" students what is to b done with the "C" and "D" students who cannot keep up. Shall they be failed or awarded credit merely for trying? Such red- it would hardly reflect on either pupil or school. We propose to go just as fast in each subject as the ability of our students justify. We solicit the co-operation of every parent toward an adequate amount of study by their children. Some children must reconcile themselves to longer hours of study if they cannot learn as readily as the maj- ority or lose their credit and repeat. This is only justice to those who can move forward at the normal rate of speed and do.

Athletics Are Discussed

Mr. Breitske was asked to give the purpose served by such forms of athletics as basket ball, baseball and similar athetic contests. He answered it well and was given a few worth while suggestions by Rev. Whyte and Mrs. Leonard Sampson. He commended the mem- bers of his basket ball squad who have been playing against stronger teams all season but who have won his confidence by their sportsman- ship and behavior. We agree wth Mr. Breitske that his basketball team includes a fine lot of boys. We have not heard among them the coarse language so prevalent among high school atheletes of other schools. They have played clean and kept their tempers and coaches of other schools have commented on their fine attitude. We believe the coach is due credit for this in part. His personal habits and sincer ity have won the boys respect. We predict a successful season for the boys next year for not one of them will leave school and they have builded well this season.

School Has Relife Drive

The drive for relief of the needy of Porto Rico undertaken through our school children amounted to $15.87. If all other schools of Amer ica do as well, many in the island will get the relief they so much need. The amo nt was sent to the Golden Rule Foundation of Chica- go. We are glad for the response given the cause by our school child- ren.

Our teachers were solicited for funds with which to supply the needs of those in the drought area of Arkansas and responded.

OBITUARY OF HENRY SCHLEI

Henry Schlei was born at Pleas- ant Ridge, Clayton County, Iowa, on February 28, 1878, and passed away at the Hampton Hospital at 7:30 a. m. Tuesdy, February 10th, 1931. at the age of 52 years, 11 months and 10 days.

Mr. Schlei has been a life long resident of this community, having moved to Hancock County with his parents when he was about one year of age.

In his youth he united with the Liberty M. E. Church and remained a faithful member thru the years.

On March 12, 1913 he was united in marriage to Miss Flora Schoen- wetter and they have made their home on a farm south and west of town. To this union there was born two children: Kermit and Melvin.

Mr. Schlei was a quiet, but indus- trious and hard working man. He was respected thruout the commun- ity as one who believed in honest and fair dealing n all things. He was one of the directors of the local shipping association.

Mr. Schlei had been in poor health for some time but had complained very little about his condition, even to his famiy. Two or three weeks ago it became evident that his con- dition was growing serous, and on Friday of last week was taken to the Hampton Hospital for examina- tion and treatment. It was discov- ered that his heart was in very bad condition, which along with other complications caused his untimely death on Tuesday morning. which came as a shock to the entire com- munity.

Besides his wife and his two sons, Kermit and Melvin, he leaves to mourn his loss five brothers: Will, of Dubuque; Ben, of Colorado; Edd of Fenton; Elmer and Alfred of this vicinity; also two sisters: Mrs. Ed. Weisbrod of Fenton, and Mrs. Edwin Josten of Klemme. Besides these many more relatives and a great many friends.

Card Of Thanks

We wish to thank all for their kindness and assistance during our bereavement; also thanking those who contributed flower and other expressions of sympathy.

Mrs. Henry Schlei, and sons Kermit and Melvin.

The BEST Gray Hair Remedy is Home Made

To half pint of water add one ounce bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and one-fourth ounce of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. It will gradually darken streaked, faded or gray hair and make it soft and glossy. Barbo will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off.

BELIEVE IT OR NOT

The following letter which has been received by the Iowa Department of Agriculture is supposed to be an actual letter written by a would-be sheep man to a Montana sheep company!

"Dear Mr. Sheep Company!

I have your literature concerning your sheep company and I am thinking I would like a sheep and go into the sheep business this summer.

I wonder if you have any sample sheep you give away. Even a small one will be all right as I will have to keep it in my office until I I can get some pasture for it, where I can put it out and have it pasteurized.

I woud like a nice, medium-weight, all wool sheep in stripes if you have them—one I can skin and have a Pendleton jacket made out of later on.

When you skin a sheep is that the end of it, or can they be skinned regularly like human beings?

I have an old sheepskin in my office I have been living off of for27 years and I thought if I had a whole live sheep I might do better.

I see in the papers there is lots of trouble about the tariff on wool, so, if you can pick out a sheep that hasn't any tariff on the wool it might save me lot of cleaning when it gets here.

And another thing, don't send me a U sheep because the signs on the street here says that you can't make a U turn and I couldn't get one to the office very well if I couldn't make it turn."

Just What MOR-GAIN PIG MEAL Can Do For Your Hogs Unless You Try It!

That's just why we are so anxious to have you come in and take out a half ton or so to prove that it will do all we say it will, and more, by balancing your home grown grains. If he ration you are feeding isn't balanced, some of it is being wasted and that waste means money lost. The money lost if put into MOR-GAIN Pig Meal will stop this loss and show a profit besides.

Others have found this out and feed MOR-GAIN regularly. They say it pays. We know it does. We have a complete stock on hand, so let us prove to you that feeding the MOR-GAIN way makes bigger hog profits. See Us For Anything Else In The Feed Line

COUNTY AGENT NOTES SOME EARLY SPRING JOBS

Says Farmers Should Treat Small Grain Before Seeding Time

This is the season of the year when farmers should be thinking about sowing small grain and also when they should be examining their orchard to see whether they must apply a dormant spray in order to control te Oyster Shell scale.

Do not seed your small grain with out first treating it for smuts. Covered and Stripe smu of barey cause an annual loss in yield of 6 per cent Oats smut caused 1 to 4 per cent loss.

The above mentioned diseases can be controlled by seed treatment before the grain is sown. The liquid tratment of barley with formaldehyde has never given satisfactory results because of injury to the seed. Recently, Ceresan, a chemical dust has been developed which controls covered smut and stripe disease. The loose and covered smuts of oats are both seed borne and may be controlled by seed treat ment. In the treatment, formaldehyde be used with either five or ten gallons of water as a tretment for 50 to 60 bushel of oats. If you prefer a dry treatment, Corona oats dust and Coreasan are equally good for treating oats. However. the dry treatment will cost about nine or tencents per bushel while the form aldehyde reatment is only about one cent per bushel.

Then, too, farmers, DO NOT sow your legume seed without innoculating it. If the field being sown was in a legume crop such as alfalfa or clover within the past four years and it was innoculated at that time, it may not be necessary to innoculate this year, however, the cost of the innoculation is a very cheap assurity for your crops success. I would also encourage the wet or jelly innoculation to the dry or powdered cultures.

Boys and girls, don't neglect sending in your name to enroll in either of the following 4-H clubs: Market or Ton Litter, Market Pig. Sow and Litter (must be purebred) Dairy Heifer, Mare and Colt, and Ewe and Lamb. All of these clubs have a good number already enrolled to date but we want many more.

DOINGS AT SCHOOL THE PAST WEEK

KLEMME HIGH WON FINAL CO. CONSOLATION AT TOURNEY

After Unsuccessful Season Locals Staged Real Finish Battle

The Hancock County Basket Ball tournament at Britt was concluded last Saturday night after fourteen games had been played by eight teams representing as many high schools. Elmer Starr of Gilmore City and the Principal of the high school at Scranton were the two officials in charge of the games and we believe there was quite general satisfaction with thir work.

Garner came through undefeated and won th silver basketball trophy and Kanawha as runner-up was awarded the tournament basketball.

Our own tem after a whole season of defeats and after losing their first game to Britt found their stride and walloped Corwith 18 to 6 and in the consolation finals on Saturday evening handed Hayfield a drubbing to the tune of 27 to 15.

They will play at Mason City on Thursday evening of next week at 7:30 against Fertile. If they should win they will play Plymouth the next evening. This tournament is the beginning of the state series.

On Thursday evening of this week in our school gymnasium will be given three one-act plays by casts from each of the following schools: Belmond, Clear Lake and Klemme. Those who come will be well entertained for they will see some good plays well acted out. As natural there is a wholesome rivalry between the three casts and the players will try to be at their best. Reserved seats are now to be had at Wilson's Pharmacy and are forty cents each. Bleacher seats are 35 and 25 cents.

In the Preliminary State Contest in Declamotory at Garner on Monday night of this week in which our school was represented Britt carried away most of the honors, winning two firsts while Garner won one. Corwith won one second place and Garner won two.

The final Hancock county Declam atory contest will be held on Wednesday night of this week also at Garner. Dorance Day will represent us in the oratorical class. Margaret Gates in the dramatic class nd Nellie Stromer in the humorous division. All have been working faithfully and we hope they may bring us many honors. We wish many might go and support them.

This week ends the first six weeks period of the new semester and we hope for a good showing in th written tests to be given. But unless students find some time to review outside of classes they will hardly expect to reflect much credit on themselves.

MABEL SMITH AND BERT MATHEWS MARRIED IN CALIFORNIA

Ceremony Took Place At Los Angeles Last Week Thursday

As a pleasant surprise to the people of Klemme and vicinity, comes the announcement of the marriage of Miss Mabel Smith, and Mr. Bert Mathews, which took place Thursday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock at the Parish of the Knox Presbyterian Church at Los Angeles, California; the Rev. Wm. Manshardt, officiating. The ceremony was witnessed by Mrs. Campbell and son, of Los Angeles.

The bride was attired in a gown of light blue silk with hat to match.

Following the wedding ceremony an elaborate wedding dinner was served at the home of Mrs. Campbell.

Mrs. Mathews, who is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Smith, graduated from the Garner High School in 1904. She taught school one year in the Arnold school near here and later taught in the town schools of Buffalo Center and Klemme. For several years she clerked for her brother-in-law, John Day at his store. She will be greatly missed in the store, by proprietor and customers alike.

Mr. Mathews is well known here in Klemme. For several years he was with the Wellemeyer Store. He was in business at Garner and also was a salesman for the Central States Electric Co. He has been selling electrical goods in California.

This romance which ended so happily in marriage, began when this couple were in their teens. Mr. Mathews, when a young man, made his home at the Smith home for a time.

Mr. and Mrs. Mathews have gone to house keeping in Los Angeles, where they may make their future home, as Mr. Mathews expects to go into business there for himself.

The Times joins in extending best wishes to Mr. and Mrs. Mathews.

FOUND DEAD AT LUVERNE

LuVerne News: Great was the excitment here Saturday afternoon when the word was passed around that a dead man had been found in an M. &St. L. culvert near the interlocking switch. Marshal Sanders was notified and in company with a physician and a volunteer corps of assistants went to the scene.

There lay the body—all wrapped in a gunny sack. With trembling hands it was pulled out to light and uncovered. Fain would we draw a mantle over the scene. but truth demands that we tell all. There exposed to the unholy view of the crowd lay a number of alcohol cans. Dead? We'll say they were! Absolutely dead.

Can't Tell What Weather Will Be, So "Be Prepared"

Altho no prophesy can be made regarding what the weather will be in March, farmers who have sows to farrow this spring will be wise to adopt the motto "Be Prepared," suggest animal husbandry extension specialists at Iowa State College.

In unusually cold weather pigs will need special care. Proper housing shoud be provided. If the weather is severe ,artificial heat may be necessary. If the pigs are farrowed in individual houses this may be secured from a lantern or lamp suspended in a sheet iron frame from the roof. If such a system is used, it will be necessary to provile proper ventilation. Straw or other dry material banked around the sills of the house will aid in maintaining warmth.

The farrowing pens should be cleaned out thoroly with boiling lye water, and before the pigs are turned out into the lot they should be taken to clean pasture.

—Program Subject To Change—

DO YOU THINK DECORATION DAY WILL BE HOT THIS YEAR?

L. C. Mead of Janesville, Wis., has gained considerable following for his long distance weather predictions.

Here,s what he claims for past achievements, together with his predictions for 1931:

Two years ago I predicted for the summer of 1930 a severe. protracted drought, beginning July 11. The last good summer rain fell July 10, the drought starting on the time forecast to the tick of the clock.

I predicted an unseasonable, cool day for Memorial day, and the temperature dropped to 38 degrees, with a light frost reported. I also predicted tornadoes in some places the latter half of June, and the country was swept by a series of them at that time.

For November, 1930, I prophesied a warmer month than usual, very dry up to the 25th. with rain snow, and a cold wave for the week of Thanksgiving.

For the summer of 1929 I predicted a dry summer, with an unseasonably cool August, which proved correct, and for the summer of 1924 such heavy rains that it would be a big boom to the river, and the bathing beaches closed the middle of August on account of high water and swift current.

In fact I have not missed my guess on a summer in a dozen years. While I may not be correct for every day of the year, yet I seldom miss the general character of the month or season, which makes it very valuable to those whose economic interests depend on the weather, or those who seek outdoor sport and pleasures. The winter of 1931 will be fairly moderate.

The forecast for 1931 follows:

January

Forty days of fasting has always been recognized as possible but the task of going 40 days without water as well as food was generally believed to be the feat only of camels. However, a hog owned by Fred Reeves, a farmer near Spencer, has joined the ranks of abstainers.

Th hog, togther with several of his mates, was caught under a slide of straw on Reeve's farm. Reeves dug into the stack and believed he had freed all of them.

Forty days later he was loading the straw when he came upon a hole about four feet in diameter from which walked a shaky thin hog, half blinded by the sudden exposure to light. The hog weighed about 200 pounds when he was buried, Reev's said but it tipped the scale at less than 100 when it was freed.

SKIES ARE BRIGHTENING

Th peak of the tide of depression has been reached, it is said. The new prosperity is coming. There is no doubt about that. Thousands are being recalled to work. Demands for labor and goods are increasing, according to newspaper reports. The signs of good times fast returning are multiplying. Confidence is being regained. We are trending upward out of the valley of depression toward a permanent prosperity

UR KLEMME MEN VISITED ARKANSAS

PLE MUST HAVE HELP FOR SEVERAL WEEKS MORE

mme Relief Food Car Arrived In Excellent Condition There

he Times interviewed the four mme men J. E. Stille, U. G. d, Paul Stille and Fred Ridder sday evening and heard their y of their trip to Arkansas and d their story of the conditions eneral as they found them.

he four men left in an automo- at 4:25 a. m. Friday, February and arrived at Carthage, Mo., evening at 6:00 o'clock. Sat- y they continued their trip and ved at Little Rock, Arkansas at p. m. where they spent the t.

unday they drove about the try and visited when they had ance inquiring about conditions getting a general view of the ity. They visited Hot Springs re they saw the hot and cold ngs and among other interest- things saw the world's largest ified tree. The tree was 64 ft. iameter and had been 700 feet . Scientists claim the tree was 0 years old when it toppled ov- gainst a hill side where it now nes.

Start Out On Trips

Little Rock the Klemme men d at the Red Cross office and e learned that the Klemme car d be sent to Morrilton when it ed. The men investigated the the work was handled and re- that the Red Cross workers very efficient and that there is omplaint on the way things are lled in Arkansas.

onday the men drove out to the munity of England, which was rted in the papers as one of the st hit communities. Condi- were found even worse than rts we get in Iowa and the men d to farmers and business men and heard their story. The nsas people all seemed very eful to Iowa for the help this has given them.

Tells How Farms Are Run

arrive at the reason for the conditions in Arkansas is more an a long story. We shall try ummarize it. Most of the state lantation land, from 400 to 10,- acres in size. This land is ten- d by "share-croppers", who are oes and poor white people, and for generations have worked he plantations and depend to a e extent on the owner to tide n over as these share-croppers to worry but little as to what s tomorrow and so do not as a lay up for a "rainy day."

hese share-croppers live on ten orty acre tracts. They receive of the cotton produced and are off by the owner, who deducts each family owes him for sup- lies through-out the year. And a- time winter comes these folks have to draw off the landlord supplies to tide them thru the o or three serious conditions the land owners in a bad way. a flood struck them and later drought finished them off. and ead of a normal crop they had a fourth, and in the best places lf crop. But the price dropped n over a half on top of that so the plantation owner was in a way. Then came bank failur- the district and forty-two in- tions closed in one day. The by the plantation owners did could not be drawn out, and be drawn out until next De- hen one-third can be tak- the other one-third the next last one-third a year foll hese plantation owners eavy borrowers of money em over. The banks be- their borrowing was cut y could not take care of families depending on owever, outside financial re beginning to go into to put the plantation ow- ners back on their feet, and the government is lending aid.

Thus we try to explain what brot on the terrible conditions there.

Klemme Car Was Unloaded

The Klemme men drove to Morrilton and were there when the car was unloaded. Mr. Pearce, owner of a string of saw mills was devoting all of his time to Red Cross work and was very generous in taking our men around and giving them all the information he could. He explained how relief work was taken care of. Each County had a central office, and connected with it each town, township, and finally each of the school districts had men working with the Red Cross. In this way the people most in need of help could be taken care of. Morrilton was taking care of 28,000 people.

People needing help had to sign an affidavit from their local worker and these were presented at the Red Cross office and orders issued for food or supplies. Every order is kept on file and everything is accounted for. Those not in need of help do not receive help.

Rumors Found To Be False

The Klemme men investigated to learn if there was anything to it that the Red Cross in some instances had charged for articles that had been donated to them. We have all heard about the potatoe story, of how one man paid $2.40 for a sack and later found a slip in the sack from a party at Alexander, wanting the receiver to write him. And how he wrote to the Alexander donator and said he paid $2.40 for the sack of potatoes that had been donated to the Red Cro s.

The Klemme men found that the rumors were absolutely false and that the Red Cross workers in Arkansas were absolutely square.

The Klemme men told how that some of the ignorant Arkansas people might think they were paying for some things. For instance an order is given a man for say a half sack of flour, some milk, beans, etc. The Red Cross have in their own warehouse the flour and beans. The two articles are charged off the list. The man goes t the store to get more groceries. To start with he had a $5.00 order. The Red Cross had charged off perhaps $1.00. He has $4.00 left to get groceries at the store. He thinks the Red Cross has charged him $1.00 for the food which people had donated.

The Red Cross invoices every article in the car, and when these are taken out of the warehouse they must be charged off in order to keep the records straight. That is where some people got the idea that the Red Cross was selling goods that had been donated for relief work.

Saw School Children Get Clothes

While the men were at Morrilton they saw a large number of school children brought in for clothing. The teachers in the schools are the workers there and they bring in the children who are in the most need of clothing. Although there was a bit of frost on the ground the men saw many children without shoes, and but barely enough clothing to be presentable.

Car Best Ever Shipped In

Mr. Olson, who was the mayor of Morrilton became acquainted with the Klemme men and devoted much of his time to show them around. Mr. Olson was raised in Iowa and his parents live at Correctionville.

When the Klemme car arrived at Morrilton Tuesday afternoon. all down to inspect it. Mr. Pearce, the head Red Cross worker and the mayor both said it came through in the best condition of any car they had yet received. Not a thing was broken. They said it was the best packed car they had seen. They were very well pleased with the fine variety of foods the car contained, and want to thank the people of this community for it.

The Klemme car was unloaded and the goods stored in the warehouse.

Children Sent Flowers

In appreciation of what the people of Klemme and community had done for them, the school children gather a large bouquet of yellow and pink flowers and presented to the Klemme men to take home with them. The flowers were distributed at the Churches of the community Sunday.

Need Help For Six Weeks

Gardens are being planted and a few early vegetables are beginning to grow. However, the men stated that Arkansas would need help for at least six more weeks, or until they could live off their gardens.

The Red Cross funds were exhausted March 1st, and that organization is still depending on food being shipped in to carry on the relief work.

The Klemme men were all very well satisfied with the way the work is carried out, and say that Klemme and community can well feel proud of the part they took in helping the people of Arkansas, because they certainly needed it,

AROUND THE COUNTY WITH AGENT WEISS

ORCHARDS SHOULD BE LOOKED OVER FOR OYSTER SCALE

Dormant Spray Should Be Applied Before Growth Starts

Farmers, have you examined your apple orchard to see if the trees are infested with Oyster Shell scale This scale is very prevalent and is increasing year after year.

By applying a dormant spray just before growth starts this spring you can rid your trees entirly of the scale. However, you must do a thorough job of spraying as every branch including those on top must be thouroughly covered with the spray solution. The most widely used solution is made up by using 15 lbs. Dry Lime, Sulphur to make 50 gallons solution. Fifteen lbs. of the sulphur is as good as 25 lbs but do not try to obtain results by using less than 15 lbs of Dry Sulphur.

Don't let a man spray your orchard unless you are sure he uses 15 pounds of sulphur to 50 gallons of solution and my advise is to be ther while the spraying is being done so that you can be sure that every branch is being thoroughly covered.

Remember too, that the Farm Bureau has a spray machine which they rent out to Farm Bureau members which is ideal for spraying.

If present arrangements pan out there will be one or two dormant spray demonstrations put on in the county this spring under the supervision of H. E. Nichols of the Extension sevvice of Ames.

To prove that at least some farmers are following a good soil improvement program I would like to state that two car-loads of lime are already ordered and about one-half already applied to the acid ground.

Lyn Pane farming the Walter Ross farm is applying lime to ten or fifteen acres of ground in preparation to securing good stands of sweet clover to plow under after being pastured and to make it possible to grow alfalfa.

Vern Haberkamp has already applied limestone to ground that will be seeded to alfalfa or sweet clover and R. V. Upmeyer is going to cover at least 17 acres of ground at the rate of two tons of limestone per acre.

These men realize that their first requirement in a soil building program is to lime their acid soil. Howard Duseberg also found that to grow alfalfa he must apply lime. How much nicer it is to spend the money for limestonethat you would probably have thrown away on high priced seed. All of the men mention ed above tested the ground for acidity rather than take a chance on alfalfa or sweet clover without first testing to see whether it would grow.

How many of you have found out that you need limestone by seeding high priced seed only to find that it would not grow?

Remember that legumes are lime loving plants and alfalfa and sweet clover will not grow on acid soils. For every dollar spent on limestone you will get four back which is about the highest rate of interest anyone would want. It isn't blue sky stock either, it will do that very thing.

Farmers, make up your mind now that you are going to treat your seed corn before planting. It Pays.

HIGH SCHOOL DEFEATED CORWITH TUESDAY EVE

Red Team Trimmed Whites In Second Game of Evening

The Klemme High school team after a season of defeats, came through Tuesday evening to prove they could win and defeated Corwith 23-18.

The first half was played in a listless manner, but the second period opened with a bang, and some real basket ball was demonstrated. The Shamrocks maintained a lead during the entire game.

Reds Beat Whites

The second game of the evening was between two pickup teams composed of the regular town team and high school boys not on the regular squad.

Those playing for the Reds were Otho Kerause RF; Leo Brown LF; Clair West C; Kermit Koerner RG; Robert Tanner LG; Wayne Pavey LF.

The Whites were Orville Stokesbary RF; Clarence Kluckhohn LF; Clarence Lemke C; Marion Carson RG and Cecil Bridges LG.

The first quarter was played in a fairly even manner and ended 4-4. After that the Reds gradually drew away. Their slightly better team work and a good eye for the basket won the game 29-11. The game was much closer than the score would indicate. Keraus was high point man with 15 points to his credit.

This was probably the last basket ball game on the local floor this season, with the exception of the class tournament to be held after the sectional tournament.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By WALTER TRUMBULL

This summer, backgammon has taken a prominent place in the conversation. Stores all are carrying ornate backgammon sets, and one Fifth avenue establishment has the champion backgammon player giving lessons to patrons. They say this man won 35 straight games against picked opponents and has written a book proving that backgammon is as scientific as bridge. Yeah? Well, I know a little colored boy I'll back against any champion who will let him use his own dice.

One of the largest New York hotels has fifteen pianos, which have to be moved on an average of 200 times a month to meet the demands of musical guests. The boss of the movers is John Ravatino, formerly a page boy, who is not yet four feet tall. It doesn't take physical strength to boss—Napoleon and Julius Caesar were comparatively small men, and John knows all about pianos. He says an upright piano is harder to handle, because his men can't get such a good grip on it, and unless you are on the job the movers will push it along the floor. Take the legs off a grand piano, throw it on its side, and it's a cinch.

I know an upright piano is hard to handle, because Arthur William Brown and I once tried to move one. We got it stuck in a door and this was serious, because we were on the inside of a room, which had neither beds, stove nor icebox and which was a couple of stories from the pavement. We didn't even have a basket we could lower for food. If we had not been rescued it might have been another of those mysterious tragedies of a big city.

An actor, out of work last season, is lucky enough to have a big part in a real Broadway success. A friend commented on his prosperous appearance.

"Isn't that a new hat?" he asked.

"Certainly," said the actor, "the whole outfit is new. Last year, when there were hard times, I couldn't afford to dress so well, but this year, of course, I get what I want."

It is all in the point of view.

Norman Stevenson was riding down Park avenue behind a florid-faced and talkative taxi driver, who remarked that it was fine, healthy weather.

"Yes," said Mr. Stevenson a bit nervously, for the driver was looking backward and the traffic was heavy, "you look healthy."

"I should say I am," said the taximan, "there is only one man in the city whose blood is as good as mine."

"Indeed?" said Mr. Stevenson, supposing that some one with the blue blood of the Vere de Veres was at the wheel.

"Yes," said the taxi driver, missing a limousine by an inch, "I certainly have good red blood. I make good money selling it for transfusions."

"Doesn't it weaken you?" said Mr. Stevenson, politely.

"Not a bit," said the taxi driver heartily. "Of course, I can't do it too often; but they take a test and, as soon as the haemoglobins are right, I do it again. A lot of persons in this town are carrying my blood around."

This sounded a little gory to Mr. Stevenson, but it seemed the time to say something, so he inquired: "How much do they take from you?"

"Oh, about 100 c.cs., said the taxi driver and then, seeing that he had been a bit too technical, "cubic centimeters, you know."

Mr. Stevenson wished to ask whether that was a pint or a barrel, but didn't like to appear too ignorant, so let it pass. Besides, he had been lucky enough to arrive at his destination without accident. But, if he ever needs blood he knows where to go.

Texas to Pay Honor to Hero of Independence

An imposing granite monument is being erected in the Episcopal graveyard at Richmond, Texas, to the memory of Deaf Smith, Texas revolutionary hero who burned a bridge behind Gen. Sam Houston's army at San Jacinto and forced it to conquer or perish. The memorial will be chisled by Louis Rodriguez, sculptor, who learned his art while shining shoes and selling papers in San Antonio. It will bear a brief account of Smith's life, giving his birth in New York, residence in Mississippi, marriage in New Orleans and death in Texas. Smith died in 1837, but a year after his courage helped his state win its independence.

Nations Find Women Spies Useful

Paris.—Half of the spies in Europe today wear skirts. Spying is a profession to which many stenographers aspire, and the only stock in trade needed is a stony heart, impervious to love and flattery, beauty and the face of a baby doll, to throw the police off the track.

Many of the chiefs of Europe's underground espionage services believe that where secrets of national defense are to be wormed from young officers, one black-eyed, raven-haired beauty can do more good than a platoon of men well versed in the art of drawing fortifications in invisible ink.

It is true also that other chiefs feel as strongly the other way. These hold that no woman is able to keep a secret in all circumstances. They employ no women spies in responsible posts. To take care of other nations' women spies they use personable young men. These young men seek and make love to them. The theory is that when the woman lets herself fall in love she tells all she knows.

Thus these men use the love lure precisely as do the women spies.

Spying seems to be more natural to women than to men, especially to women who like intribue. Ever since Mata Hari went to work for Germany during the World war and used her art of making men fall in love with her, she has been looked upon as queen of the spies.

Mata Hari, like other women spies, made the fatal mistake of falling in love herself, and before long she was caught and faced the firing squad in the mont of Vincennes castle.

During and just before the war Germany used many women to get information. England, in the few years before the war, was swamped with German governesses and nursemaids, seeking jobs at any price, and generally in the homes of British army and navy officers.

One of the strangest of these was Emma Stubert, woman companion, who changed over and quit her spy job with the central powers and became one of the best spies in the service of the allies. Five spies of the central powers went to the execution post upon evidence turned up by the governness.

Since the war, no woman spy has been more successful than a French woman, Marthe Moreuil, before her arrest. She worked for the love of the game and for her lover.

Although she had never been in an airplane before, she went to several aviation fields and asked to be allowed to practice parachute jumping. Friendly soldier pilots took her for rides high over the field and allowed her to leap with her parachute.

Once established, she struck up friendships and was able to pass to her English friends an enormous amount of information, drawings, and documents before the band was arrested. Then she took her prison sentence of six months with closed lips.

Prince of Norway to Visit America?

Lake Placid, N. Y.—Crown Prince Olav of Norway, himself an enthusiastic winter sportsman, may visit the III Olympic winter games to be held at Lake Placid in February, 1932, coming as a good will ambassador of Norway, according to a cable received by the III Olympic winter games committee here.

The cable advice came from Bjorn Blix, international secretary of the games, following an audience granted him by Crown Prince Olav in Oslo. Mr. Blix is now visiting the major capitals of Europe, aiding European groups in making arrangements for the winter Olympics.

Norwegian participation in the games is practically assured, Blix cabled after meetings at Oslo with leading sports groups. Twenty-five contestants and five group leaders probably will comprise the Norwegian delegation, together with a substantial group of Norwegian newspaper and magazine correspondents.

W. G. Howard of the New York state conservation department, also a member of the New York State Olympic commission, has further advised that the conservation department is at once starting work on the construction of an Adirondack leanto on the summit of Mount Van Hoevenberg, which may be used by skiing parties visiting the bobrun. Numerous shelters and sheds are being built by the commission at the base of the course.

Doing Disagreeable Things

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

The colonel is rather a hard smoker. He had a half dozen dark colored, heavy cigars in his pocket when he came to take me to the ball game, and he was puffing away at them in a way that presaged their rapid disappearance into smoke.

"When did you learn to smoke?" I asked him. I have a theory that whatever habits we have are picked up pretty early in life.

"I suppose I was fifteen," he said. "It didn't come easily to me. Gracious! how sick it made me. Over and over again I thought I should die, but I persisted; I kept at it; I was determined to smoke like a man, and finally I conquered."

I could see that he had.

"Now, if anyone had set for me the task of learning to smoke," he went on, "if father, for instance, had insisted that I go through the physical agony incident to the acquiring of such an objectionable habit, I should have left home, or reported him to the society for the prevention of cruelty to animals, or done something desperate. It is unbelievable how much pain and hard work and generally disagreeable experience a young person will endure when he himself chooses the disagreeable task, and how he revolts when the job is wished on him by some one else."

We had reached the ball game by this time. It was a hot afternoon in October and the sun was pouring down on the bleachers and on the field. It was a rough game, and occasionally a man would be laid out or taken out with the breath knocked out of him, or a bunged-up eye, or a fractured bone, or a contusion of one member or another. They came out of the game with reluctance; they hung their heads in apparent shame; at times, even, they were weeping because they were not permitted to endure more pain. They took pride and delight in their bruises.

"If we forced our children into games of this sort," the Colonel remarked to me, "we should be considered savages by our neighbors, and if we refuse to let them go in they consider us cruel."

In front of the bleachers, toiling, sweating, putting themselves through the most exhausting physical contortions, were the cheer leaders. They were yelling until they were black in the face; they were leaping into the air; they were turning hand springs and engaging in the hardest sort of work for two hours or more.

"One of those wild Indians out there is my son," said the Colonel, pointing to a red faced perspiring youth whose strenuous physical exertions I had been following. "He follows the team wherever it goes just for the privilege of working like that and if I should ask him to wash the car or to walk down town to do an errand for me, he would grow pale with exhaustion. Aren't folks funny!"

ONE-PIECE DRESS WITH JACKET IS FASHION'S SPRING MESSAGE

VIEWING in the original the ensemble pictured, one is impressed first of all with its color scheme. The jacket and the skirt portion (it is a one-piece dress plus a jacket) is brown, the seamed-on blouse top is a creamy beige and the soft tie-girdle is lined with turquoise. So there you have it—a tri-color effect. Which brings us to the point we have in mind and which we wish to make very clear since it has such a direct bearing on fact, there is a delightfully old-fashioned air about them.

Coats for Spring.

There is everything in the way of smart details to make the spring coat a theme of fascinating interest. To consider this all-important subject in a properly style-minded way, one must, this season, think in terms of cunning fabric manipulation which involves such intriguing details as sleeves which boast of all sorts of an important feature of the new spring fashions. We refer to the working of several colors with a view to achieving striking contrasts. Throughout costume design color contrasts are exploited.

This charming outfit also calls attention to the fact that brown is regarded as an outstanding color for spring. Even the hat worn with this costume carries the message of brown, the fine straw of which it is made, harmonizing with the brown of the dress.

As to the material employed, it is flat crepe, the general consensus of opinion being that flat crepe will prove a leading fabric not only for daytime dresses and ensembles but in the lighter colors, it is very popular for evening wear.

The soft tie-girdle which holds the jacket in position is a styling feature which is giving a new aspect to the spring mode. Ties of self-fabric are playing a varied role. Not only are jackets tied about the waist in the manner illustrated, but any number of "tricky" cuffs and flares, scarf necklines which are unique and adjustable, while revers of generous proportion, some of them quite a la Directoire, are made a very special feature.

Note in the picture the broad revers, the wide belt of self fabric, the triple flare effect of the sleeves below the elbow—definitely style revealing are these details when it comes to new coat trends.

As to fur on the spring coat, it is entirely a matter of preference as to whether it shall be furred or go unfurred. Designers have a clever way, this season, of adding fur to the outer edge of cloth revers or shawl collars or perhaps novel cape-collars which admit of adjustable arrangements which place it up to the wearer to manipulate effectively. The cloth-plus-fur collar which styles the coat illustrated is of that sort.

Stunning scarf effects distinguish the new all-fabric coats. These are worked most ingeniously, sometimes having a wide end drawn through a slot cut so the streamer goes diagonally across in a decorative manner.

Rough spongy woolens vie with crepy weaves with colorings running to blue tones as a close second to black. Brown exploited as a spring color is a most important message as is also the vogue promised for gray, a color which has been sadly neglected during the last several months.

Juniors will hail with delight the new coat ensembles made of swagger spongy woolens or tweed which have a matching beret together with a detachable scarf frequently worn inside the coat collar and tied ascot fashion.

In asking for blues, mention bright navy, or skipper, or guardsman blue, and you will be shown the "last word" in coat colorings.

Sunday School Lesson

Lesson for March 8

THE GOOD SAMARITAN

GOLDEN TEXT—Thou shalt not avenge, nor bear any grudge against the children of thy people, but thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself: I am the Lord.

LESSON TEXT—Luke 10:25-37.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus' Story of a Real Friend.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus' Story of a Real Friend.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Serving and Sharing.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Stewardship of Life.

I. How to Inherit Eternal Life (vv. 25-38).

1. The lawyer's question (v. 25). The term "lawyer" here means one versed in religious law—the Scriptures, not lawyer in our modern sense of that term. It would more nearly correspond to our theological professor. The lawyer's object was to trip Jesus, to induce him to take such a stand as would weaken his influence as a teacher. He expected Jesus to set forth some new ceremonies which would conflict with or disparage the law of Moses.

2. Jesus' question (v. 26). Though Jesus knew the motive of the lawyer, he did not evade his question. He sent him to the law, the field which was familiar to him. He thus robbed him of his own weapon.

3. The lawyer's reply (v. 27). He made an intelligent answer, declaring that the entire content of the law was embraced in love to God and man. This expresses the whole of human duty.

4. Jesus' reply (v. 28). The straightforward answer went to the heart of the lawyer. Perfect love to God and man is truly the way of life. No man has yet had nor can have such love. His sinful condition precludes its possibility. Man's failure to measure up to this requirement is his condemnation. The lawyer keenly felt this thrust. He was defeated on his own grounds and convicted of guilt.

II. Who Is My Neighbor (vv. 29-37).

1. The lawyer's question (v. 29). This question reveals the insincerity of the lawyer. Christ's answer had reached his conscience, and now he seeks to escape the difficulty by asking a captious question. Lawyer-like he sought to get off by raising a question as to the meaning of words.

2. Jesus' answer (vv. 30-37). Jesus' reply more than answered the lawyer's question. In the Parable of the Good Samaritan he makes clear who is a neighbor, and also what it means to be a neighbor and what loving a neighbor means. Christ's answer had a double meaning. He not only made clear who is my neighbor, but made it clear that the lawyer was not playing the neighbor.

a. Who is my neighbor? This destitute and wounded man, left on the wayside by the robbers, is a man who needs a neighbor. My neighbor, therefore, is the one who needs my help, whether he lives next door or on the other side of the world. It does not regard locality, nationality, or blood relation.

b. What being a neighbor means. Our supreme concern should not be "Who is my neighbor?" but "Whose neighbor am I?" To be a neighbor is: (1) To be on the look-out for those in need of our help (v. 33). It is keen to discern the needs of those with whom it is brought into contact. (2) To have compassion on the needy (v. 33). Christ's compassion was aroused as he came into contact with those who were suffering and in need. (3) To give to those in need (v. 34). Love does not calculate the cost of its actions. Whenever there is calculation of cost, there is the expression of selfishness. Many are willing to give money to help the poor and needy but are unwilling personally to minister to them. The true neighbor gives himself as well as his money.

(4) To bind up wounds (v. 34). If we have eyes to discern, we shall see many wounds about us that need attention. (5) To set the helpless ones on our beasts while we walk (v. 34). This is the proof of the genuineness of our love. Those who are like Christ will deny themselves in order to have something to give to those who are in need. (6) To bring to the inn and take care of the unfortunate (v. 34). Genuine love does not leave its service incomplete. True love follows up the needy. (7) To give money (v. 35). It costs a good deal to be a neighbor. Love is the most expensive thing in the world. It cost God his only Son. It cost Jesus Christ his life.

This parable has been through the centuries the classic illustration of true Christian neighborliness.

Born of God

"He that loveth is born of God," therefore let us "keep our friendships in repair." Let us cultivate the spirit of friendship, and let the love of Christ develop it into a great love not only for our friends but for all humanity! —Henry Drummond.

God's Errands

Difficulties are God's errands; and when we are sent upon them we should esteem it a proof of God's confidence.—Henry Ward Beecher.

FARM STOCK

TELLING AGES OF SHEEP IS KNACK

Many Beginners Do Not Know How.

Ewes have been good property lately. This has prompted newcomers to enter the business. A good many of them may not know how to "mouth" a sheep. The old and accepted way to mouth a sheep has been described a hundred times and then some. It is good so far as it goes, but when it goes no further than about five-year ages the green hand with sheep is up against it! The ages offered for sale often give the beginner small chance to practice the usual craft of mouthing sheep.

A pair of large cutting teeth in the middle (below of course) mean the animal is a year old and under two. Four teeth there mean a two-year-old and under three—and so on. The age may vary a little in months, but this is of no consequnce to the farmer. The snag comes when the ewe shows "a full mouth," which puts the mouthing man on his own resources for age beyond five years.

After that the gums begin to shrink away from the crown of the tooth, making it appear long from cutting edge to gums. If the gums do not come up snugly to the crown of the tooth, then you have an aging ewe. If the "neck" of the tooth is long from the crown to the gums your ewe has seen her best days. If the teeth have begun to break, anybody knows that means old age and a very sensible excuse for offering her for sale!

This knack of estimating the age of a full mouth may be worth several years of lamb production for the buyer. If these long-necked teeth can be sprung out and in with the thumb and finger, you have a mouth that is about ready to "break."

Milk Goats Worthwhile and Quite Profitable

Among worthwhile and profitable pets the milk goat stands high. The goat is one pet that pays its board bill.

The ordinary scrub milk goat costs ten to twenty-five dollars and gives about a half-gallon of milk daily when well fed. She usually freshens about the first of the year and often has twin kids. As for feed, the proverbial tin can ration is a hoax. She must be fed quite like a cow, and her feed must be ample if she is milking heavily. Goats can be fed all of the usual grains and they can be trained to eat other products as well. In a series of experiments at the college one group was reared on hay, fish meal, and oats. Another group was fed ground liver.

Goat's milk is white and butter made from it is white. The fat in goat's milk is in such small particles that the cream rises slowly, and it takes several days in the ice chest before a thick cream layer is formed. The fat content is about the same as that of a Jersey cow, although it varies widely with individual animals.

The market for goat's milk is usually localized. It is usually developed by the initiative of the owner who sells milk to a local hospital, sanitarium, or to special customers.

Cheap Hog Grain

Wheat is a cheaper grain for hogs at present than corn and has given excellent results in many experiments this year and in former years. The wheat is ground coarsely and fed in a self-feeder. A mixture of two parts tankage and one of oilmeal is used as supplement with splendid results. For mineral with this ration one may be able to use a home-made mixture of two parts limestone, two parts bone meal and one of salt. The commercial minerals will serve well.

There is nothing as good to feed sheep as good, bright alfalfa hay.

Recent tests in Indiana indicate that good heavy oats are equal in value to corn for fattening western lambs.

Care should be exercised in seeing that the horse also gets all the salt he cares to eat and that he is well supplied with plenty of water of good quality.

The production of beef cattle in the United States is important not only in our agriculture but also in the agriculture of the world.

Most of the cattle fattened in the corn belt area are bought in the fall as two-year-olds from the western range.

Selling direct to a speculator or packer buyer in the country and shipping direct to the packing house appeals to some producers on account of the elimination of stock yard charges.

How to Escape FLU

1 Avoid so far as possible the places where flu germs are most likely to be spread; overcrowded cars and public meeting places; overheated, stuffy rooms.

2 Be careful of close contact with others and beware of all coughers and sneezers; breathe through the nose, get fresh air, but avoid drafts or chilling.

3 Get lots of rest. Eat plenty of citrus fruits. Keep the bowels open. Take extra precaution to keep in good physical condition, so your system will have high resistance against germs.

4 Above all, avoid catching colds. They lower your resistance to the flu germ. Ward them off. At the first sign of any cold, take Bayer Aspirin and remain indoors if possible until your cold is gone. If you have a sore throat, dissolve some Bayer Aspirin tablets in water and gargle; this will relieve the soreness and reduce the inflammation.

5 If you have any reason to suspect even a touch of flu, call your doctor at once.

Always be recklessly cheerful and you are food for bores.

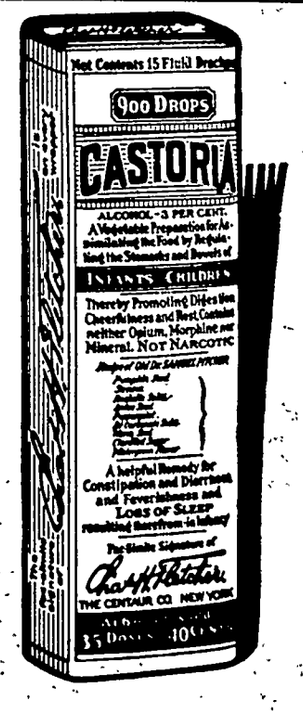
Castoria made especially for CHILDREN



CHILDREN usually hate to take medicine but every child loves the taste of Castoria. And mothers like its action—so gentle, yet so prompt and effective.

Castoria is a never-failing comfort to children and mothers alike because it was formulated expressly for children—to correct their little ills and upsets.

The beauty of it is you can give Castoria to children of all ages with equally sure results. When baby's cry warns of colic, a few drops of Castoria has him soothed; and free from pain, he is asleep again in a jiffy.

In an older child when coated tongue or bad breath tell of constipation, a more liberal dose is usually all that is needed to cleanse and regulate the bowels.

Your doctor will tell you Castoria deserves a place in the family medicine cabinet until your children are grown. He knows it is safe for the tiniest baby; effective for a child in his teens.

FARM ACCOUNTING SCHOOLS HELD LAST WEEK

How a simple set of farm accounts may be kept and how facts from such accounts can be used to increase farm profits, were discussed at a series of meetings held in Hancock County by J. J. Wallace, farm management specialist of the Extension Service at Iowa State College in Cooperation with the Hancock County Farm Bureau.

Farmers were assisted in starting an account book and will be helped again in making the final summary and analysis. Each farmer who completes an account book is personally visited on his farm by a farm management specialist during May or June at which time the means of improving the organization of the farm are considered. When the summary is presented the individual farmer has an opportunity to compare his farm with the average of about 100 farms ni his section of the state and also with the 20 most profitable and the 20 least profitable farms in the district. This gives him a standard by which to measure his business, The identity of every farm is kept confidential by the Extension workers,

The management return on 258 farms in this district for the year 1929 was $758.00. Management return is the amount the farmer receives for management after the business has been charged with the operator and family labor, 3½ per cent interest on real estate equity and 7 per cent interest on his working capital.

Charts and material were shown proving that the principal factors influencing profits are size of business, livesock returns, crop yields and efficient use of labor and equipment. This simple account book, which may be secured at the Farm Bureau office for 15 cents, if properly kept and summarized, will show a farmer how much his business is gaining or losing, says Mr. Wallace.

Summaries were made for 651 farmers in the state by the department at Ames last year and it is estimated that at least 750 1930 records will be summarized.

Meetings were held at Kanawha, Garner, and Britt.

HUNT SUBSTITUTE FOR OATS

H. D. Hughes Suggests Barley, Soybeans, Winter Wheat or Flax May be More Profitable

More Iowa farmers are considering a substitute crop for oats this year than ever before because of continued low oat prices, according to H. D. Hughes head of the Farm Crops Department at Iowa State College.

He suggests four crops, barley, flax, soybean and winter wheat, which may be used to replace part of the oat acreage to give a larger net return.

Barley is probably the best substitute on Iowa farms because it fits perfectly into the rotation, is seeded as the same time as oats, is an excellent nurse crop for clover and gives about the same distribution of labor. Experiments show that barley will produce about 25 percent more pound of grain per acre than oats, on the average. Thirty percent of the oat kernel is hull, while only 15 percent of the barley kernel is hull, giving a net gain of about 50 percent of actual feed from barley as compared with oats.

Several smooth awned varieties of barley have been developed that are now no more objectionable to handle than oats. Velvet barley, the most popular of these, is now planted on more than one third of the barley acreage of the state and is a high producing variety.

Hughes expects a big increase in the acreage of flax, as not enough is produced to supply industry in this country. Flax is protected by a high tariff, which will insure Iowa farmers a profitable crop. Investigations show that flax is not hard on the land. Bison flax is a good wilt-resistant variety and can be obtain direct from Iowa growers. Flax is seeded at about the same time as oats and is a good nurse crop with which to seed red clover and alfalfa Hughes warns against seeding sweet clover with flax as the clover is likely to crowd out the flax. He further advises against seeding the flax on weedy ground as it will not fight weeds.

Soybeans will give a much more valuable crop than oat when grown for either seed or hay. They will yield about two tons of cured hay per acre which approaches alfalfa in feeding value and they are one of the surest crops to plant. The cracked beans have great feeding value for dairy cattle and chickens, and will replace part of the tankage in hog feed.

The average acre of winter wheat will give a greater feeding value per acre than oats. Winter wheat and soy beans can be included in the rotation splendidly by following the soy beans with winter wheat. The wheat may be seeded in the soy bean stubble without any special seed bed preperation. Winter wheat then gives a good place in which to seed clover.

Muscatine, Ia., Mar. 4, Special:

With Thousands of railroad men thrown out of work in shop and railroad centers throughout Iowa, due to the inroads of truck and bus competition, unemployed workers of roads centering in Muscatine held a meeting here last week and appealed to the public for "fair treatment" in the protection of their jobs and their families.

Resolutions adopted by the workers and sent to leading citizens of Muscatine County call attention to the fact that wages pad by railroads in Muscatine alone total nearly $300,000 yearly, and taxes paid by railroads to Muscatine county total $84,000 a year.

They further draw attention to the fact that trucks and buses using the public highways of Muscatine county, and which have thrown so many railroad workers out of employment, pay but nominal taxes, and hire but a nominal number of men.

They assert that the benefits received from cut rates on trucks and the loss of the revenue which the buses are incidental compared with the loss of the revenue which the railroads give to the community in payroll andtaxes.

The committee of workers plans a vigorous effort to present its cause to the public, both from the standpoint of unemployment and from the standpoint of fairness in competition.

PREPARE HOG AND POULTRY HOUSES NOW

Best Get Them Ready Before Rush Work Of Spring

Hog and poultry houses which will be needed for the chick and pig crop next spring may be built or repaired during the winter months to help prevent "rush" work in the sprng, suggests V. S. Peterson, extension specialist in agricultural engineering at Iowa State College.

Farmers who plan to build new houses and will need plans may secure them at small cost by writing to the Extension Service at Iowa State College.

Plans for movable hog houses of the new low roof type or gable roof with doors in the top to admit sunlight are available. Plans for farrowing houses of various sizes, including the gable roof with a storage loft above, semi-monitor and gambrel type of roof may be secured.

Plans for brooder houses, both movable and stationary, and plans for hog and poultry feeders are available.

A WASHABLE FLAT WALL PAINT FOR YOUR WALLS

SHERWIN-WILLIAMS
FLAT-TONE

S-W Flat-Tone, the washable flat wall paint, is a favorite with painters and decorators everywhere because of the better work they can do with it. Flat-Tone works easily under the brush and levels out free of brushmarks. It dries to a soft velvety sheen pleasant to look at and easy on the eyes.
Flat-Tone is frequently called "liquid wallpaper" because of patterned effects in Multi-Color and Textured Tiffany produced over it. Use Flat-Tone over either rough or smooth plaster and over any good wallboard. It is ideal when used over textured surfaces like burlap or rough plaster because it brings out the full beauty of the wall. Flat-Tone colors do not fade, walls finished in it are lastingly beautiful—and economical, too.

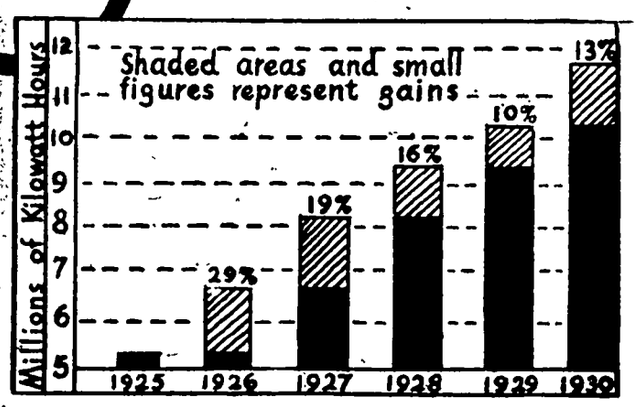
Why we say 6% AND SAFETY



Increased use of electricity

We say "6% and Safety" because the use of electricity is constantly increasing.

The above chart shows the record of our Company—more than twice as much electricity distributed in 1930 as was distributed in 1925—an average increase of over 20% per year. The increase in 1930 was 13%—during a year when most major industries showed a marked decline in business.

The use of electricity will continue to increase for we are living in an "electric age." New appliances and equipment are constantly being developed which bring added comfort and efficiency to the home, the office and the factory. These improvements will mean "increased use" in the future.

This "increased use" is one of the factors which assure you of the safety of an investment in our 6% Cumulative Convertible Preferred Stock.

Ask any manager or employee about it.

The three one-act plays presented by the three schools: Belmond, Clear Lake and Klemme, given at the local auditorium last Thursday evening, were well presented. Miss Trumbell, who coached the Klemme players, deserves much credit. The Klemme players showed the best training of any. Miss Trumbell also has two complete casts for each play, where the other schools had but one. For specialties Klemme had the high school orchestra; some of Miss Goll's pupils, Allan Barz,, Marjorie Lemke, Keith Stille, Evelyn Lewis, Robert Johnson and Jacqueline Kudje put on some clever drills. Marian Waterman, one of Miss Bremer's pupils, very ably sang two solos and an enchore. The songs were: When the organ plays at Twilight," "Here comes the sun" and "Around the corner."

Talking of Twins—

Photos by International

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

IF YOU want to get in the news pictures, be a twin! Many schools have won temporary fame because a picture has gone out bearing this familiar caption "—— Sets of Twins in One School Puzzle Teachers" and the number which is inserted in that blank space varies from five to seventeen. A few years ago Stephens college at Columbia, Mo., already famous as "the Vassar of the West," won even more renown from the fact that it had in its enrollment no less than 18 pairs of twins, and that they had formed a unique organization, named the "Duplex club."

In St. Louis a year or so ago the press agent for a pair of "Siamese twins" who were appearing at a local theater had the happy inspiration to give a "twin party" to which all twins were invited. Sixty-five pairs, ranging in age from two months to forty-five years, were on hand with the result of an interesting group photograph—and much good publicity for the "Siamese twins." In New York city twin daughters of a lawyer attended the Fordham law school together, were graduated together, passed the state examinations together, were admitted to the bar together and the news photographers rushed to picture them together! Among the most publicized candidates for admission to West Point in recent years were the seventeen-year-old twin sons of a Pennsylvania soldier, killed near Chateau Thierry during the World war. When President Hoover nominated them for admission to the United States Military academy, news stories (and a news picture, of course), recorded the fact that "their appointment is believed to be the first designation of twins ever so made."

But are twins such a rarity after all? Science gives an answer which you can interpret as you wish. It says that of every 1,000 babies born there are ten pairs of twins. That's 2 per cent. If you want to base your calculations on some of the much-publicized "twins in schools," you will find the percentage somewhat higher. A California school a year or so ago broadcast the fact that it had nine sets of twins in an enrollment of 300—that's 6 per cent. Similarly Logan, Iowa, reported 12 pairs of twins in an enrollment of 275—a little over 8 per cent.

But whether you consider these figures as evidence that twins are or are not such rarities, the fact remains that the study of twins has challenged the attention of scientists for many years, and some definite results to explain them have been accomplished, although the scientists are not entirely in accord in all conclusions. Two kinds of twins are generally recognized—the "fraternal" and the "identical."

"Fraternal" twins are children born at almost the same time, but the product of two life cells. They may be the same or opposite sexes, and frequently bear no more resemblance to one another than any brother and sister. They are simply a biological coincidence.

But in the case of "identical" twins, it is a far different matter; for they are produced by the splitting of a single life cell. They are invariably of the same sex and, furthermore, resemble each other amazingly, not only facially, in coloring and other physical details, but in mental processes, emotional reactions and in other subtle ways. They are literally two halves of a single personality.

Instances of remarkable resemblances between twins usually refer to the "identical" type, although it is generally conceded that there was no safe criterion for distinguishing between the "identical" and the "fraternal" until a Japanese scientist, Taku Komai of the Imperial university at Kyoto, Japan, anounced his discovery of a method. Of it he says:

"In the course of study on my collection of fingerprints and hand and soleprints of some twins, I have come to realize that, generally speaking, the same hands or feet of the identical twins resemble each other more closely in their patterns than the two hands or feet of the same individual.

"This statement holds good in principle also for several identical twins studied by others; while such a condition can never be found in twins of different sexes nor in twins of the same sex bearing evidence for their being fraternal twins. Thus, we seem to be justified by saying: 'Such twins are identical twins in which the same hands or feet of different individuals are more alike than the different hands or feet of the same individual.'

"But this statement must not be taken as involving the notion also that, if the former resemblance is less than the latter resemblance, the given twins are fraternal, since there are some twins which are apparently identical and yet do not show the condition mentioned above. Anyway, this will probably serve as a criterion for identifying some identical twins.

"Some writers on twins and twinning seem to hold the view that the identical twins are comparable with the right and left halves of the body of one person. The view could not be quite correct, should it imply that the resemblance between the identical twins is in principle equqal to the resemblance between the right and left halves of one person. As a matter of fact, speaking generally, the resemblance between the identical twins is more than that between the halves of one person. Aside from the fact that the viscera shows a marked asymmetry even among identical twins, there are several cases known where such twins have the same defect or abnormality on the same side of the body. Moreover, as mentioned aboye, the hands or feet of the same side of different twins show closer resemblance than the two hands or feet of the same individual."

But how does science account for twins, anyway? No one has ventured a positive answer, but it is generally believed that the process which takes place to produce twins is as follows:

The ovum, a single cell, is fertilized, and thereupon begins to divide—always by twos—into many cells. Gradually these are differentiated into three types and form themselves into layers in the form of a sphere, the middle of which is hollow, called the blastosphere. Up to this point the process is normal. For some reason not known, however, the blastosphere next begins to split. It is thought that this is possibly due to the fact that the cells on the inner layer expand much more rapidly than those on the outer and, naturally, the outer layer bursts, as does a football bladder when it is blown up too tightly. When the split is complete the sides of the two split portions are joined together and we have two distinct blastopheres, which proceed to form identical individuals.

Since the division is always by twos and it is the opinion of Dean Horatio H. Newman of the University of Chicago, author of "The Physiology of Twinning" and "The Biology of Twins," which are regarded as standard reference works on the subject, that it is thus obvious that triplets can never be identical. Two of the children may be duplicates and the third merely a fraternal type, the result of the fertilization of a second ovum. It is possible, however, for quadruplets to be two sets of identical twins, Doctor Newman holds. In such instances the two blastospheres, that resulted from the orignal split, in their turn divided.

The famous German case, partly legendary and partly substantiated by records of the time, of the woman who gave birth to eight children at one time, is also recalled. In this instance—so rare that it is mentioned in all reference works on biological anomalies—the four blastospheres again divided to form eight. An extremely vital reproductive cell may survive two divisions and four normal children result.

Some of the most important evidence as to the nature mode of sex determination and much additional light on the age-old dispute over the relative importance of heredity and environment comes from a study of "identical" twins who have been adopted in infancy by different families, according to Dean Newman who has had charge of a study made by the University of Chicago, of orphans adopted into private homes. Among the 800 children studied were 50 sets of twins. Of this number the cases of two were particulrly interesting—first that of Eleanor and Georgiana Kelly. Eleanor had been adopted when she was two years old, Georgiana at eighteen months. Both had grown up in environments in many respects entirely different. And yet they are as nearly alike as they could be, not only in appearance but in the matter of mental drives and impulses as well.

In contrast to the Kelly twins, there is the case of Alice and Olive Redman, also identical twins studied and observed by Doctor Newman and his assistants. Alice and Olive, born in London, were separated from each other, through adoption, for more than ten years. Not long ago, they were reunited in Oshawa, near Toronto, Canada.

The Redman girls received about the same amount and kind of education, they are remarkably alike physically, and they apparently have the same interests and tastes. But there is a vast difference in the mental developments of the girls.

1. To this Council Bluffs, Iowa, family goes the distinction of being America's "F. F. T." (Finest Family of Twins). They are Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Kroger and their ten children—five sets of twins. The twins are Clyde and Claude, born in 1912; Addie and Abbie, born in 1914; Floyd and Lloyd, born in 1919; Jean and Jeannette, born in 1923; and the babies, Donald Dean and Norma Jean, born in 1930.

2. Leo and Theo Bogant of Corvallis, Ore., have a double (no pun intended!) distinction. Not only are they twins but they are leap-year twins, having been born February 29, 1916. Although they are fifteen years old, they have been able to celebrate their birthday only three times! They are shown above holding the cup which they won at a recent "Twins' Round-Up," held at Albany, Ore., in which 208 sets of twins took part.

HISTORY'S MYSTERIES

Unsolved Riddles That Still Puzzle Authorities Here and Abroad

Who Was the Count St. Germain?

ONE of the greatest imposters of the Eighteenth century, the Count Saint-Germain, takes his place alongside Cagliostro, the Chevalier d'Eon, the Chevalier St. George and the man in the velvet mask as one of the unsolved enigmas of history. Who was he? Where did he come from? What finally became of him? The official annals of Europe are silent on all these questions—yet the mysterious chevalier was one of the leading figures of his time, a man who wielded power and spent money like water, who bent the powers of diplomacy to his will and exerted a marked influence upon the history of more than one nation.

Walpole says of him: "He is called an Italian, a Spaniard and a Pole; a somebody that married a great fortune in Mexico and ran away with his wife's jewels to Constantinople; a priest, a fiddler, a nobleman. But no one knows the details of his life and everything about his past is a matter of vague conjecture."

When Saint-Germain first appeared at the court of Louis XV he circulated a report, similar to that used by Cagliostro, that he was two thousand years old and that only one of his many remarkable discoveries was a magical liquid which would enable men to live practically forever. Most of the historians of the time credit him with having been a Portuguese Jew, but various surmises have been made as to his having been of royal birth, as he claimed. The "chevalier" could speak nearly all the European languages, including German, English, Italian, French, Portuguese and Spanish, and when he suddenly appeared at the French capital he was taken up by Louis who made him his boon companion, as did Mme. de Pompadour, who was then very prominent in affairs of state.

Grimm referred to him as "a man of the best parts I have ever known and, apart from his ability as a linguist, a musical composer and a violinist of the highest order, with a comprehensive knowledge of history and notable accomplishments as a chemist, in which latter field he based his principal claims to an international reputation."

Saint-Germain figured in a number of conspiracies at the various courts of Europe and played an important part in connection with the conspiracy which placed Catherine II on the Russian throne, following the forced abdication of her royal husband. So remarkable were his exploits in the diplomatic world that dukes and ambassadors came regularly to his house for advice, though he numbered quite as many of these among his enemies as among his friends. His intimate knowledge of the history of the entire Christian era and the details with which he surrounded his accounts of personal contact with many of the leading figures of past centuries, gained wide credence for his claim of being 2,000 years old and, according to one story which is apparently well authenticated, he allowed an old woman to drink some of his precious elixir of life and she immediately became a girl of sixteen.

The chevalier was also an expert in removing flaws from diamonds and one of the absolutely unquestioned feats of his career was the success which he had in taking the flaw out of a diamond belonging to Louis XV, a stone which would have been extremely valuable if it had not been for a marked defect. Saint-Germain, as is proven by unimpeachable documents, took the gem home and kept it for several months, finally returning it to the king without a blemish.

Another mystery surrounding him was the source of his income. He had no landed estates and no other apparent source of revenue, yet he always had plenty of money which he spent lavishly and without a thought for the morrow.

The last heard of the mysterious chevalier was in 1780 when he became the companion of the landgrave of Hesse and it is reported that he met his death in Schleswig-Holstein in the same year. But Grossley, a fellow of the Royal society, declared that he saw Saint-Germain in a French prison in 1794, during the Reign of Terror and various persons in later years believed they recognized him—among them Lord Lytton in 1860 and Van Damme a few years previous to this.

Possibly the best summary of the entire case of this unusual personage is that given by Andrew Lang: "Did Saint-Germain really die about 1790 or did he escape from the French prison where Grossley thought he saw him? Was he known to Lord Lytton in 1860? Was he the 'Major Fraser' at the court of Louis Napoleon in 1855? Who knows? He is a will-o'-the-wisp. Whenever you think you have a chance of finding him in authentic state papers he gives you the slip."

BABY BEEF CLUB BOYS TAKE NO CHANCES ON BLACK LEG

Several Members Had Baby Beeves Vaccinated The Past Week

Most of the Baby Beef Club members are sure of one thing and that is that they are not going to lose their calves because of Black Leg. Dr. J. S. Wesson spent most of Saturday morning vaccinating calves for Black Leg at no expense to the boys. Kenneth Grieman, Elmer and Elfriede Messelheiser, Glen Janssen Kenneth Sprau, Avery Beier and Robert Schneider all took advantage of Dr. Wesson's fine co-operation.

Stalks Worth $6.00 Per Ton

Farmers, now is the time to work down your corn stalk ground so that you don't have to burn the stalks off. Remember this, that for every ton of corn stalks you burn you are burning six dollars worth of plant food to say nothing of the humus. If you will drag down your corn stalks while they are part frozen they will break up rather fine and then when you disk them later you should have no trouble with them. Remember, too. that if you put what time it would take to burn them, dragging and discing them you can save the plant food and humus which will naturally result in greater crop yields.

A word to the farmer's wife is appropriate at this time in regard to their poultry 1. Do not overcrowd chicks. Allow but two chicks per square foot of floor spoce in the brooder house up to eight to ten weeks of age. 250 chicks need a 10x 12 one room house; 300 chicks need a 12x12 foot one room house and 400 chicks need a 12x16 one room house. 2. Start feeding chicks a good chick mash on clean papers when the chicks are 48-60 hours old. Continue feeding a good chick mash.

FARM BUREAU EXPLAINS HOW TAX CUT WORKS

Would Mean A Saving Of $73,655 In Hancock County Alone

The executive committee of the Iowa Farm Bureou Federation has announced the results of an exhaustive analysis of the tax situation of Iowa as made for that organization by tax experts.

The report presents the goal set by the joint resolution passed by the 43rd General Assembly for tax revision, eliminaion of the millage levy for state purposes, etc.

If this goal is reached it will mean, based on taxes levied in 1929 and collected in 1930. a saving to tax paying property of Hancock County of $73,656 or 10% of its total tax bill which was $733,181.

This sum of money is equivalent to 21% of its district school tox which was $348.809: 47% of its county road taz which was $158,152 133% of its city tax which was $55,383; 171% of its general county tax which was $43,115.

The total general state tax was $10,134,375.

The Iowa Farm Bureau Federation further points out that income tax legislation proposed can bring savings to tax paying property in every county in the state.

WATERMAN NAMED ON SCHOOL BOARD

HARRY GIBBS RE-ELECTED ON BOARD FOR THREE YEARS

One Hundred And Seventy-Five Cast Votes At Monday's Election

The ticket originally contained seven candidates for director, but R. C. Ludeke and Herman Schuldt withdrew from the race before he ballots were printed.

Town Election Is Next

Nomination papers for the Town Ticket must be filed not later than this Saurday.

The School Election gave voters a good choice of candidates, and the town ticket should also have a variety—the more the merrier You fellows who are interested should get together and file a ticket so we can have a lively election.

Plenty Of Men For All Jobs

In the past we have sometimes had men who served on more than one town or school office. The Editor believes this is poor policy. We have plenty of capable men in town so that we do not need to double up and have one man in more tnah one public office. Bear this in mind when forming the town ticket. It may not come up again, but it has occured in the past.

Get your forces together and get out some real competition for the town election, which will be held on the last Monday in March

IOWA TOWN OF 600 SENDS CAR OF FOOD

(From The Arkansas Unit, Morrilton, Ark.)

Although Klemme, Iowa is a small town of about 600 people. it deserves to rank with the largest cities in the world for the generosity of its people, as was demonstrated this week when the people of that town made up and donated a carload o food for the needy in Morrilton and surrounding communities.

The mixed car of groceries included flour, potatoes, creamery butter manufactured in Klemme, potatoes rice, cured meats, several pair of shoes were also sent in the car with the groceries. The Conway County chapter of the Red Cross began distributing the provisions following the arrival of the car early Wednesday morning.

A delegation from Klemme arrived in Morrilton in a mode T ford automobile a few hours ahead of the carload of food. They were F. H. Ridder, J. E. Stille, Paul Stille and U. G. Smid. Leaving Klemme Friday morning, they arrived in Little Rock about 3:30 o'clock Saturday afternoon covering a distance of approximately 900 miles in the model T. automobile. While here they were entertained by Mayor O. J. Olson, who is a native of Correctionville, Ia. They left for Klemme Thursday.

The mixed carload of food was made up in less than a day by the people of the little town in Iowa, it was reported

METHODIST CHURCH NOTES
H. E. Whyte, Pastor

Tuesday evening the district music festival was held at the M. E. Church in Algona and it was a great success. The church was filled to capacity and standing room was at a premuium. It is estimated that there were over a thousand people in attendance. The program which lasted for two full hours was followed with intense interest from beginning to end.

The program consisted of quartets, solos, orchestra and chorus numbers.

The chorus work was directed by Prof. Paul McCollin from the music department of Morningside College.

There were two chorus groups which sang; the A Group composed of 111 voices. and the B Group of 158 voices. The divisions were made on the basis of membership of the charge. The Klemme choir sang in the B chorus.

The orchestras were also classified as A and B on the same basi, which placed our orchetra with the B Group. These orchestras were directed by Prof. Kucinski, also of the music department of Morningside College.

This was all a new venture this year but proved to be one of the biggest events in the district this year.

DOINGS AT SCHOOL THE PAST WEEK

LOCAL SPELLING BEE WILL BE HELD FRIDAY

P. T. A. Meeting Will Be Held Next Tuesday Evening

Our basket ball team played their last game of the season Thursday evening at Mason City agoinst Fertile who defeated them. Fertile was still in the running until defeated by Kensett who were in the finals Saturday night and ost to Sheffield by a close score. By and large our boys did not make a bad showing. They have improved fast during the last few weeks of the season and no doubt will go well next season for all will be back next year.

The Seniors and Miss Trumbell called last Friday at the Russell Studio where the Seniors went for their class pictures. The proofs are eagerly awaitel.

The Seniors are hard at work on their class play and like it. They expect to delight the public with it in a few weeks. But a lot of work is involved geting it into shape.

Our boys are looking forward to baseball now and may be seen hurling the old pill back and forth to get arms and hands in shape.

Local Spelling Bee Here Friday

As our county spelling bee is to be held at Garner it seems appropriate to hold our local this week on Friday afternoon. The P. T. A. voted the usual prizes of $1, 50c and 25c for the winners of the first, second and third places in each of the grades, and $1.50 for winner of first place over all.

We may or may not send the winner of firstover all to Garner this year. He or she must demonstrate beyond doubt his or her superiority over all others and records of more than one days work in spelling will be consulted to determine this superiority. We want Klemme represented next Saturday by our very best speller and most consistent speller. We cannot rely on the success of any one days performance to determine who is the very best. We hope the very best and most consistent speller remains up longest next Friday and can earn the prize of $1.50. But if by chance she or he goes down on an unfamiliar word he will not lose his chance to represent us at Garner, if on the whole his record in spelling many words has shown his superiority.

We believe a little different method of electing the winner in each class may be preferred to that used last year.

We are asking our P. T. A. president to appoint a spelling committee of three to work out the best plan of procedure for Friday afternoon's contest. It will be announced just previous to the contest.

Parents of children in our grades are invited to attend this contest, which will begin a 1:15 P. M. There will be contests going on simultaneously in each of the four grade rooms, and then best spellers from each grade will begin their battle for the largest prize, beginning in lower rooms.

The P. T. A. is in need of a little more money for the spelling contest prises so a small charge will be made for the lunch.

Mrs. Gus Ehrenberg of Spokane, Wash., in a corner of her beautiful garden which has been awarded first prize in the National Yard and Garden contest for amateurs. Mrs. Ehrenberg says much of the credit for her success is due to her two Boy Scout sons, Elliott, fourteen, and Allen, twelve.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By WALTER TRUMBULL

Efrem Zimbalist, master violinist and a grand person, has just returned from a trip around the world. He sailed from New York to Genoa and from there to the Orient. Mr. Zimbalist was perhaps most interested by Japan, where he played compositions of Beethoven and Bach, accompanied by a Japanese orchestra. He says the Japanese are fine musicians, that they know all about western music, and that they have educated themselves in that knowledge in the past twenty years.

He told me he thought the most beautiful place for its size on earth was Java. I said I always had thought the most beautiful place I had ever seen was Sicily. Then we both agreed that really the most wonderful scenery in the world was to be found in America.

"Only," said Mr. Zimbalist, "the average American doesn't know it. There are wealthy people here in the East who know all about Europe, but never have seen the Grand canyon, the Yellowstone, Zion or Rainier parks, the redwoods of California, the Canadian rockies, or the woods and lakes of Michigan, Wisconsin or Minnesota. They don't even know much concerning the Adirondacks, although they can tell you about the Dolomites or the Alps."

And it is true. There are tens of thousands of persons in New York who never have been north of Boston, south of Washington, or west of Cleveland. Many of them have never been that far, except in one direction—the one from which they came.

Whether true or not, a good story is a good story. Heywood Broun told me this one. He said that a Notre Dame scout happened to be in the East and that Knute Rockne sent him word that, although Notre Dame did not play Yale, he was curious concerning the ability of Albie Booth and wished the scout would look him over and get a real line on him. The scout's report, for purposes of the story, read:

"Booth is a good football player. Not wishing to underestimate him, I still must say that I do not consider him a great back. He would not make the Notre Dame first-string backfield.

"Why," the letter concluded, "I don't think he would even make all-America."

Buyers of New York stores who make fairly frequent trips to Europe are looking for the first good break they have had in several years. They say that Europe at present is a "buyers' market." Foreign manufacturers are overstocked and willing to listen to reason. When the United States was riding the crest of general financial affluence, Paris merchants could get about any price they had the nerve to ask. Now they are looking for custom.

New York has many theatrical clubs. The best known are the Players, Lambs and Friars, but there are a multitude of others. There are, for instance, the Back-Stage club, the Greenroomers club, the Chinese Dramatic club, and the Amateur Comedy club. None of the larger clubs are confined to actors. The Players is only a bit over 50 per cent in its actor membership. This club is housed in the old home of Edwin Booth and has an atmosphere the others do not possess.

A New Yorker of wealth who went big game hunting in Africa was aided by a chief of one of the tribes. By way of showing his gratitude, after his trip was over, he shipped the chief a big box of edibles. The chief found some one who could write and dictated a letter of thanks, saying the stuff was so good that he had been able to swap a small portion of it for a couple of wives.

"I wonder," said the New York man, "how long that fellow is going to remain grateful?"

Mastiffs More Than Match for Lion

New York.—The mastiff, probably the oldest of the British breeds of dogs, has remained unchanged in form, size and colors for hundreds of years. And always he has been known for his courage.

"It is written that the Romans found the mastiff in Britain and, noting its great strength, took it to Rome to fight against other great and captive beasts," says Freeman Lloyd in Home and Field.

"Soon after Britain was discovered, the 'pugnaces,' or fighting dogs of Epirus, were pitted against those of the British, and, according to Gratius, completely beaten.

"As to the bravery of the English mastiff, one writer relates an instance of a contest between three mastiffs and a lion in the presence of James I. This affair took place in the Tower of London, which at that time had its collection of wild beasts. "One of the dogs, being put into the den, was soon disabled by the lion, which took him by the head and neck and dragged him about. Another dog was then let loose and was served in the same manner. But the third, being put in, immediately seized the lion by the lip and held him for a considerable time, until being badly torn by his opponent's claws, the dog was obliged to quit his hold.

"The lion, greatly exhausted, refused to renew the engagement and, taking a leap over the dogs, fled into the interior part of his den. Two of the dogs soon died of their wounds. The last survived and was taken care of by the king's son, who said: 'He that has fought with the king of the beasts should never after fight an inferior creature.'"

The mastiff has been bred by the English for massiveness and power, Mr. Lloyd points out in his Home and Field article, and with those attributes has come great courage.

Desire for Power

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

George, who was twelve, was the oldest of the five Van den Berg children and made the most of his position. He felt that his mature age and experience gave him the right to give advice and directions and in no small way to control the actions of the younger members of the family. George very much enjoyed the power which his seniority gave him, and though the younger boys were often galled by his authority it was easier on the whole to submit in most cases than to revolt and have a riot. It is the same point of view which we not infrequently assume in our more mature human relationships. We are irked by the arrogance of those who exercise authority over us, but we say nothing.

But George's authority was for the time being coming to an end. He was going off for six weeks to a summer camp and Fred, who was the next oldest in the family, was looking forward with eagerness to his own ascension to the throne. He had the desire to run things himself and he felt that with George out of the way it would be easy. When George was on the train and well on the way to camp Fred turned to his mother and remarked with a sigh of satisfaction:

"Well, mother, it's a great relief to be rid of George." With George gone his desires for power were to have fewer inhibitions.

It is strange how many people want to be chairman of the committee, or president of the Rotary club, or head of this or that, and all because the position gives them some prominence or authority. There is never an office open that some one is not eager to fill it.

I had two letters in this morning's mail from members of an organization to which I belong. Each one wants to be national president of the organization, and they are sending out much literature, and expending much time and money to bring about that result. It is the thirst for authority, the desire for power which is urging them on, and they are quite willing to spend time and money to reach that end.

Two boys were in my office today. Each one wants to be appointed to a position of authority in college—a position which carries with it a considerable amount of power. But neither one has given much consideration to the responsibility which goes with authority and power. There is work to be done; there are decisions to be made; there are embarrassing situations to be met by those who have executive position and power, and it is these things rather than the honor attached which has always loomed up before me when I have considered any position of power or authority. Too many men whom I have known do not know how intelligently to use authority. They do not realize that power is sometimes the most delicate, the most dangerous, the most difficult thing to use properly.

Russian Princes Do Well in America

New York.—Prince Mdivani, late of Tiflis but more recently of Paris, was in his youth an aide de camp to Czar Nicholas II and in his middle age a general in the Russian imperial army.

If the Soviet had not changed everything the lives of his three handsome princeling sons, David, Serge and Alexis, must inevitably have followed much the same course.

But now we have:

Prince David Mdivani, married to Mae Murray, American motion picture star, and giving "husband" as his occupation when arrested for speeding in Santa Monica, Calif., a couple of years ago.

Prince Serge Mdivani, engaged in the oil business in California and claimed by Mary McCormic, American opera singer, as her future husband.

Prince Alexis Mdivani, youngest—and some say handsomest—of the three, engaged to marry Louise Astor Van Alen, great-granddaughter of the late Mrs. William Astor, who once ruled New York society as imperiously as the Mdivanis ever ruled in the Russian state of Georgia.

When Prince Alexis first heard of the American girl who is to be his bride he was attending an exclusive boys' school in England, and among his chums were two young Americans.

Then everything began to turn topsy turvy. The prince's father, who had won distinction in the imperial army in the early years of the World war, was military governor of the Caucasus when the Russian revolution occurred. Georgia became a republic, with his father as minister of war.

The Bolsheviki arose. The Mdivanis were exiled and their property confiscated. The three young princes had to look about for something to do.

They all came to America.

David married Mae Murray in Hollywood in 1926, with Rudolph Valentino as his best man.

Serge was president of the Georgian Exploration company, Inc., dealing in oil lands and leases, with offices in Paris and New York, when, in 1927, he married Pola Negri.

Alexis on his arrival in America hunted up his schoolmates, the Van Alens, who helped him get a job. During 1928 and 1929 he courted Louise Van Alen and spent a great deal of time at the Van Alen estate at Newport, where they are to be married at Easter time.

After Serge had married Pola Negri in 1927 at her chateau near Paris and the couple had come on to Hollywood somebody expressed doubt that Serge was a real prince.

He retained a lawyer and established his lineage.

Lucky Find

When we find some slight help makes a marvelous improvement in a child, we wonder why we hadn't thought of doing it long ago.

Here's a good example: "My little girl was doing fairly well," says Mrs. M. Seitenbach, 5605 Emile Street, Omaha, Neb., "but I noticed she didn't eat right and didn't have much energy.

"Our doctor had recommended California Fig Syrup, so I gave her some. She improved so much I wonder I didn't do something for her stomach and bowels before. She has a good appetite and digestion and plenty of energy, now."

To point up a child's appetite, increase energy and strength, assist digestion and regulate the bowels there's nothing like California Fig Syrup. Doctors advise it to open bowels in colds or children's diseases; or whenever bad breath, coated tongue, etc., warn of constipation.

FOR CONSTIPATION

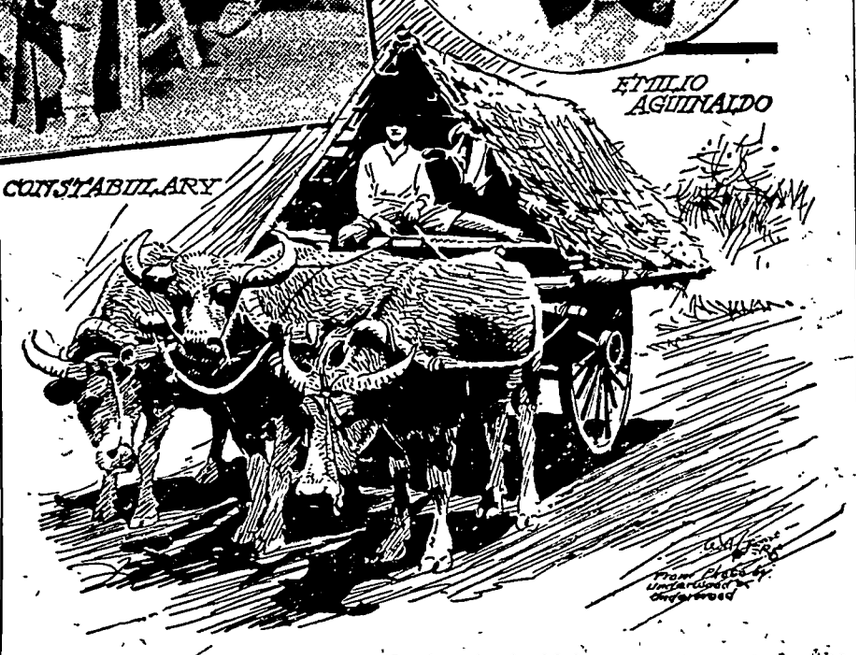
When Funston Captured Aguinaldo

GEN. FRED FUNSTON

GROUP OF MORO CHIEFS

FILIPINO CONSTABULARY

EMILIO AGUINALDO



By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THIRTY years ago America had a new national hero. He was "a little man with a slight limp; a little man who weighs less than a hundred pounds, with a Vandyke beard and a sense of humor that bubbles in him like the effervescence of wine." His name was Frederick Funston and his "madcap enterprise," as he himself called it, put his name on the lips of millions. For Funston had captured Emilio Aguinaldo, the leader of the Filipino insurrectos, the most talked-of man in the Orient, if not in the whole world at that time, who for three years had been leading some 70,000 American troops and native auxiliaries a merry chase from one end of the province of Luzon to another. On March 23, 1901, the chase came to an end when, through the daring and the strategy of the little Kansan, this wily native leader was taken prisoner.

Insignificant though Funston may have been in appearance, few men's lives had been packed as full with adventure as had his when he sprang into fame almost overnight. He was born in Ohio in 1865, the son of a first lieutenant in the Union army, who in 1867 moved to Kansas when Frederick was two years old, where he was elected to the Kansas state legislature and later elected and repeatedly re-elected to congress.

Young Funston was educated in Iola, Kan., attended the University of Kansas for two years and then went to work as a newspaper reporter, first at Fort Smith, Ark., and later on the Kansas City Journal.

During the summer of 1896 he attended a mass meeting in New York called to arouse sympathy for the Cubans who were struggling to throw off the yoke of Spain. Funston became interested in the cause of Cuban liberty and offered his services to the Cuban Junta. After drilling recruits under its direction, he joined a filibustering expedition and aided in delivering to General Gomez the first Hotchkiss guns owned by the Cuban revolutionists. Two weeks later he was placed in charge of these guns as captain of artillery.

During his 18 months in Cuba Funston took part in 22 engagements and so fearful was the execution wrought by his guns (five pieces, including a pneumatic dynamite gun, the first ever used in battle) that the Spaniards set a price upon his head. At the battle of Samal his lungs were pierced by a Mauser bullet and while he was recovering from this wound his hip was injured by his horse falling upon it during a cavalry charge. This was followed by an attack of fever and with his health broken Funston attempted to reach the coast and escape to the United States.

He was arrested by the Spaniards but succeeded in convincing them that he was a deserter from the Cuban army (after swallowing the passport which would have betrayed him) and although they at first sentenced him to a firing squad and a stone wall, he was finally freed and sent to the United States. This was in 1890 and the next few years Funston spent on the lecture platform.

At the outbreak of the Spanish-American war he organized the Twentieth Kansas Volunteers a regiment similar to the Rough Riders, of which he was made a colonel. His regiment was ordered to the Philippines and in November, 1898, he joined Gen. Wesley Merritt at Manila and aided in the capture of the capital.

It is at this point that Aguinaldo comes into the picture. The early life and ancestry of this leader is cloaked in mystery. He is said to have much Spanish blood in his veins from which came his intelligence, his courage, his military ability and his political acumen. When in August, 1898, he declared himself president of the revolutionary government of the Philippines and general in chief of its army, he called himself Don Emilio Aguinaldo y Famy. He was even then dreaming of independence for his native land, after the Americans had defeated the hated Spaniard and these dreams led to the insurrection against the new masters of the islands.

Almost from the beginning of the insurrection Funston had been in the field against Aguinaldo's followers. His strict discipline had not made him especially popular with his soldiers, but after the affair at Murilao river in April, 1899, he had their unbounded respect. There he found the bridge across the river destroyed and a strong force of insurrectos on the other side to resist a crossing by the Americans. Selecting 20 of those who volunteered to accompany him, Funston swam the river, drove the enemy back and took 80 prisoners. A few days later, with only 45 men, he crossed the Rio Grande at Calumpit on a raft, and after a desperate fight drove 2,500 of the enemy from an intrenched position. For this feat he was promoted to brigadier general of volunteers.

Throughout 1899 and 1900 there was constant fighting but always the leader of the insurrectos eluded capture. Sometime during 1900 he seemed to have dropped out of sight entirely but in January, 1901, from his hiding place in the province of Isabela, Aguinaldo sent out a letter denouncing the subchiefs who had taken the oath of allegiance to the United States and ordered certain insurgent forces in southern Luzon to join him at the rendezvous in Isabela. The messenger entrusted with this letter surrendered to an American lieutenant in February and upon securing the information so long desired, General Funston determined upon a daring plan for capturing Aguinaldo. Going to Manila to lay his plans before his superiors, Generals MacArthur and Wheaton, he finally gained their consent to the attempt. Taking with him Capts. H. W. Newton and Russel T. Hazzard, Lieuts. Oliver P. M. Hazzard and Burton J. Mitchell and a company of 80 Macabebes who spoke the Tagalog languages, he was landed on a beach south of Casiguran in the province of Principe on March 13, 1901.

Aguinaldo's messenger and the Macabebe scouts were to pass themselves off as a detachment of insurgent Tagalogs who had captured the five Americans and were taking them as prisoners to Aguinaldo. The position of Funston and his companions was a dangerous one. Everything depended upon the faithfulness of the Macabebe. Should they turn traitor to the Americans, it meant certain death. But they remained faithful and after a fatiguing and dangerous march of seven days and nights, the party reached a point eight miles from Palanan, Aguinaldo's hiding place. A message, stamped with the seal of General Lacuna, an Aguinaldo supporter, which had been found among the papers handed over by the insurgent leader's messenger, was sent forward to Aguinaldo and a prompt response was received, welcoming the party. The Americans and their fake Tagalogs hastened forward. Funston himself was not present at the actual capture. That he entrusted to a Spaniard, Iazaro Segovia, and a detachment of the scouts. The story, as Funston told it later, follows:

"Running up the bank toward the house, we were met by Segovia, who came running out, his face aglow with exultation and his clothes spattered with the blood of the men he had wounded. He called out in Spanish: 'It is all right; we have him.' We hastened into the house and I introduced myself to Aguinaldo, telling him that we were officers of the American army, that the men with us were our troops, and not his, and that he was a prisoner of war. He was given assurance that he need fear no bad treatment. He said, in a dazed sort of way: 'Is this not some joke?' I assured him that it was not, though, as a matter of fact, it was a pretty bad one on him. While naturally agitated, his bearing was dignified, and in this moment of his fall there was nothing of the craven."

In after years Aguinaldo was loud in his praise of Funston for the audacity and skill of his plan, saying that only by the stratagem used could he have been captured. The news that Aguinaldo was captured was flashed to the United States and was hailed with delight as the sign that the long and weary war against the insurgents was over at last. President McKinley on March 30 commissioned Funston a brigadier general in the regular army and had it not been for his untimely death in 1917 it is probable that he would have been commander in chief of the A. E. F. when the United States entered the World war. His only part in that great conflict was to give his name to a training camp in Kansas where thousands of men received their training for "over there."

THE MILDEST WINTER

The mildest winter in probably a century was the winter of 1877-78, according to Charles D. Reed, Director of the Weather and Crop Bureau of the Iowa Department of Agriculture.

In that winter the average temperature for the State of Iowa as a whole, for the three winter months, December, January and February, was 32.2 degrees, which is 10.5 degrees above the temperature of the normal winter. Temperature records are available some place in Iowa back to the winter of 1819-1820. Next to this stands the winter of 1881-82, with the Statewide average temperature of the three months, 30.2 degrees.

Statewide temperature averages for the winter of 1930-31 are not yet available as this is being written, but for the Des Moines station the average was 31.9 degrees, which is lower than the winter of 1881-82 so the present winter will probably fall in about third place among the milder winters.

The winter of 1930-31 is the driest of record in Iowa in 58 winters. The average total of rain and melted snow for the state for the three winter months is 1.32 inches, while the next driest winter, 1919-20, is 1.52, and the next, 1876-77, 1.54. February, 1931, with a statewide average of 0.25 inch, is the driest February of record except February 1877, which had only 0.21 inch.

FORMER KLEMME PASTOR LIKES TO READ THE TIMES

Holstein, Iowa
February 23, 1931

Mr. R. A. Jorgenson,
Klemme, Iowa

My Dear Friend:

I have wanted to write to you for some time, but this is a busy old world with us as I presume it is everywhere else.

The Klemme Times is a regular caller every week and a welcome one too. We appreciate its calls I can assure you.

Everything is going well with us as usual. We are kept busy with various activities in our regular work along with the other activities in our town or community. It will be of interest to tell you that we have organized a Boy Scout troop, which promises great things here. About twenty-five came out for the first meeting and there are indications that we may have fifty or more. Carlyle was elected senior patrol leader and of course is quite elated over it. We hold the meetings in our church basement—a fine place to meet. We have a man in business here who was a scoutmaster in Sioux City for some time. I think he will do well. We will be connected with Sioux City same as you are with Mason City.

Basketball meets and tournaments are much in vogue at the present time. Our boys took the county tournament at Battle Creek for the third time in succession. They are getting used to bringing home a trophy every year. Taking the county meet was the climax of an undefeated years work. Of thirteen starts they won thirteen games. They still have several hard games to play outside the county before the sectional meet.

In football they fared almost as well. I am naturally very proud of this record, since a goodly number of these boys are in my Epworth League and S. S. class.

Two weeks ago Mrs. Gauger and I went to Sioux City to visit William. We found him well and in fine spirits. He has taken on about fifteen pounds of avoirdupois since in school and carries it well. He is at old tricks (learned in Jergie's shop) that of putting in several hours a day in a print shop.

While there we enjoyed the rare treat of seeing the great German opera "Die Walkuere"—the Valkyrie. It is a musical production dramatized. An orchestra of about sixty peices accompanied the drama The orchestra was personally direct by the great Max Von Schillings, a German as were all the players and singers. He is gracefullness personified. He does not always direct, but lets assistants do so. By courtesy of our local editor, Mr. Hueschen, who had advertised them, we received two five dollar "Comps". We had the advantage over many of an audience of 3500 in being able to understand words as well as music.

Harlan is all steamed up and parading about in his pajamas and bed room slippers ready to go to Turner Hall where the grade folks are puttig on an operetta. Stanley are putting on an operetta. Stanley Kindergarten band as drum major. They like school and are doing well.

Well I think I had better call time and sign off. With kindest regards to you and Mrs. Jorgenson and Raymond Jr. we remain.

Very sincerely,
A. W. Gauger

Our Terms Will Be

CASH

Beginning April 1st

ON APRIL 1st THE NORTH IOWA GRAIN COMPANY WILL GO ONTO A STRICTLY CASH BASIS.

We pay cash for everythig we buy from the farmer, as wll as for everything we sell to him. Modern methods of merchandising, as well as changed conditions, make it ncessary that we sell for cash also. New levels of prices, both for grain and merchandise are being established. Both will have to be handled closer than ever before. In order to meet these new conditions, to co-operate to the fullest extent with our patrons, and to help to the extent in bringing business back to normal, we are making the change.

In 75 per cent of the seasons, for the past ten, the farmer would have been ahead if he had sold his grain early in the season and paid cash for his purchases. Holding his stuff and going in debt has been an ecoomic loss to him as well as to the seller:

The entire country has got to get onto a cash basis, cut out some of the present day overhead and meet these new conditions. We wish to co-operate.

This change of policy was decided upon after serious consideration. It will mean lower prices to the consumer.

Carlson and sons, Donald and Dorance, of Pilot Mound, Iowa; Mr. and Mrs. Lee Robbins, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Robbins, and W. Robins from Goodell; Mr. and Mrs. Carl Swanson, of Ogden, Iowa; Mrs. Helma Allein of Boone. Vic Carlson of Wannington. Ind., and Mrs. Anna Chinnel of Knob Hill, Alberta, Can. were unable to come. They are a brother and sister of Oscar Carlson.

S. B. Durant, our representative from Hancock County, was in Klemme Saturday visiting friends, as the law-makers were enjoying a recess. Mr. Durant put through the new pheasant bill, which will allow the farmers to shoot pheasants that are damaging crops and gives the farmer the right to pick up the bird and use them for food. The old law required the farmer to leave the bird lay where it fell. Another of S. B. Durant's bills which has been passed provides that but one supervisor shall retire from office each time, thus leaving two old members on the board at all times.

MACHINERY AND MEN

Those who have been boasting about this "machine age" may ere long wish, from present indications that they had never heard of such a thing. Employment experts now engaged in studying labor condition are reaching the conclusion, as no doubt a number of Klemme people have already done, that machinery really is responsible for our nation-wide wave of unemployment. California and New Hampshire have banned steam shovels from certain jobs in order to give more employment to day laborers. But that is only the beginning of the conflict. The demand for labor by those who have families to feed may become so strenuous that even the big industrial plants, boasting single machines that replace dozens of workers will be forced to bow the knee and grant th demand. It looms as the next great battle in the industrial world—men against machines—and one which every man who labor and who employs labor is vitally interested.

Sugar Lobby Gift Story Under Investigation, Senator Davis Promising Help—Lame Duck Sessions Probably Will Be Abolished.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

Senator J. J. Davis

IN THE closing days of the session of congress the senate ran into what gave some promise of developing into another lobbying scandal. Mr. Borah read to it an article in a New York newspaper which said, in effect, that a senator, during his former occupancy of a high official position, had received $100,000 from the president of a domestic sugar company in return for his agreement to lobby for a high sugar tariff. Senator Nye of North Dakota had already alluded to the story, deploring the fact that such an unsubstantiated report had been given publicity and credence. Replying to questions, Nye admitted that the campaign expenditure committee, of which he is chairman, had come upon the report of a $100,000 gift to a senator, had incompletely investigated it and had turned over a memorandum to the committee on lobbying. He said he thought the senator in question was entitled to have an inquiry made and the truth established by the lobby committee, which is headed by Senator Caraway of Arkansas.

At the instance of Senator Borah, supported by Senator Robinson of Arkansas, the senate instructed the lobby committee to investigate the story.

Immediately thereafter Senator James J. Davis of Pennsylvania, former secretary of labor, announced off the senate floor that he stood ready to appear before the lobby committee at any time and that he would assure the committee of the presence of several witnesses whom it would desire to hear. Among the witnesses he named was Bror G. Dahlberg of Chicago, president of the Southern Sugar company. Mr. Davis declared he would assist the committee in investigating the charges "to the bottom."

Appearing later before the lobby committee, Senator Davis declared the charges, if directed at him, were absolutely false.

WITH little or no expectation that his veto would be sustained, President Hoover put the mark of his disapproval on the veterans' bonus loan bill. His veto message to congress included data provided by Secretary Mellon showing how the bonus loans would aggravate the financing difficulties of the treasury, and also new estimates of the number of veterans who will apply for the loans.

ABOLISHMENT of the "lame duck" session of congress seemed assured when the house adopted the Gifford resolution to that effect and providing for the inauguration of the newly elected President in January instead of March. The resolution, which proposes an amendment to the Constitution, differs somewhat from the Norris measure passed by the senate with the same purpose, but it was believed the differences would be ironed out in conference. It is planned that the terms of the President and Vice President shall end on the twenty-fourth day of January and the terms of senators and representatives at noon on the fourth day of January of the years in which such terms normally would end. Congress would assemble on January 4, and the President would be sworn in on January 24.

ONLY a veto by President Hoover can keep the government from going into the power business, for the senate joined with the house in accepting the conference report on Muscle Shoals. The senate vote was 55 to 28. This indicated that a veto would be sustained. Twenty Republicans voted for the measure, eleven of them being of the radical group which has the power question for its chief issue.

Another rebuff for the administration was administered when the house passed Senator Wagner's bill setting up federal and state employment agencies, without a record vote. It was believed President Hoover might kill the measure by a pocket veto.

ONE of Oklahoma's lame duck Republican congressmen, U. S. Stone of Norman, put forth a parting wall that aroused little if any sympathy among the national law makers but considerable among the public at large. Mr. Stone had introduced a bill barring relatives of members of congress and of high officials from becoming federal employees, and the other day he called at the White House to ask President Hoover's support for the measure and also to tell what this attack on nepotism was getting him.

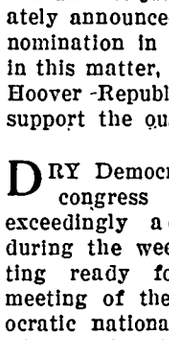
U. S. Stone

"I never dreamed," said Mr. Stone, "that a simple, constructive move on my part could make such a difference. I pass fellow house members in the hallways of the office building and they do not speak to me. My wife is punished for my daring. Even bureau clerks in legislative departments give me the cold shoulder and interfere with my work as a member of the house.

"I have had members whisper that I am right, but that I would not succeed. Others have warned me that I would suffer for my rashness. The reaction against my proposal to make it 'unlawful' for any legislative, ministerial, or judicial officer to appoint any person related to him when the pay is to come out of public funds has been most extraordinary."

The last annual report of the clerk of the house reveals that approximately 100 relatives are now on the pay rolls of members, and a survey shows that many of these have never done a lick of work in the offices for which they got their appointments.

One letter to Mr. Stone points out that the daughter of a certain representative signed vouchers for $3,500 last year and spent almost the entire time abroad. Another report which he would like to investigate before a committee is that a southern member has paid his father $16,000 and the man has never been in Washington.



Senator T. D. Schall

MINNESOTA Democrats announced, through Chairman J. J. Farrell of their state executive committee, that they would try to unseat Senator Thomas D. Schall, Republican, who was reelected last November in a five-cornered contest. Farrell said Schall would be charged with violating the state corrupt practices act and also with violating federal regulations governing the use of postal franking privileges, and that the state elections committee would be asked to declare the seat vacant so that a new election may be called.

When Senator Schall was told of this in Washington he said only: "That does not deserve comment."

The blind senator's dispute with President Hoover and Attorney General Mitchell over the appointment of a new federal judge for Minnesota continues. After rejecting Schall's choice for the post, Ernest D. Michel of Minneapolis, the President named Gunnar B. Nordbye, now a Minneapolis district judge, and Schall immediately announced he would contest the nomination in the senate. His course in this matter, it is said, has led some Hoover Republicans in Minnesota to support the ouster move.

J. J. Raskob

DRY Democrats in congress were exceedingly active during the week getting ready for the meeting of the Democratic national committee scheduled for March 5. Chairman John J. Raskob had announced that the committee would consider future policies of the party, and assuming that he would try to commit it to the wet side of the prohibition controversy, the drys were lining up to fight him to the bitter end. Senator Morrison of North Carolina, one of the most arid ones, said his group had enough votes to defeat any wet resolution. Senator George of Georgia asserted the committee had no right to form party policies, that being the function of the national convention. Other Democratic leaders were anxious to head off any discussion of the liquor issue.

Naturally the approaching committee meeting caused a lot of talk about presidential possibilities. The names heard oftenest were those of Governor Roosevelt of New York, Governor Ritchie of Maryland and Senator-elect James Hamilton Lewis of Illinois. In Chicago there developed quite a boom for Colonel Lewis on his return home from a sojourn in the Southwest.

PEHR EVIND SVINHUFVUD, who has just been elected president of Finland, is going to have the prohibition question put up to him promptly. Distinguished women of the country, of all parties, are circulating a petition asking his support of a speedy repeal of the "pernicious prohibition law."

The petition urges mothers to "feel deep concern in the ever increasing intemperance which ruins men, women, and children morally and physically. It is awful to contemplate how alcohol will affect the descendants of the present poisoned generation unless legislators abolish the prohibition system." The petition further points out that women are unable to restart a temperance movement until the demoralizing prohibition law is repealed and replaced by reasonable legislation.

ONCE again the United States Supreme court has upheld the validity of the Eighteenth amendment. This time the action, which was unanimous, was in reviewing the decision of Federal Judge William Clark of Newark, N. J., who held that the amendment should have been ratified by state conventions instead of by state legislatures. This decision was reversed, the opinion being written by Justice Owen D. Roberts, the newest member of the Supreme court.

In a case appealed from Michigan, the Supreme court held that the severe penalties of the Jones "five and ten" law are not applicable to conviction for possession of liquor.

Ambassador J. C. Grew

WHILE the conference on narcotics was in progress in Washington, word came that Joseph C. Grew, American ambassador to Turkey, was getting results there in the fight to suppress the illegal exportation of the drugs from that country. Mr. Grew made vigorous representations to the government at Angora and brought about the sealing of the three big drug factories of Istanbul with their entire stocks, to be effective until the factories present documents attesting the amounts of production and exportation.

Drug exporting from Turkey to countries such as the United States, which do not allow unrestricted entry of narcotics, is henceforth expected to be impossible, as a government official has been attached to each factory to control production and exportation. Factories must report to the government every 24 hours the amount of raw material purchased and the amount of production. The director of the Japanese factory in Istanbul says the new order is so severe that his factory probably will be forced to cease functioning.

Admiral Juan Aznar

THOUGH King Alfonso of Spain told American correspondents that all was calm in his country now and that danger of a revolution had passed, Admiral Juan Aznar, the new premier, was not finding the sailing weather especially fine. This was mainly because the national executive committee of the Socialist party and the labor union decided to boycott the national elections and co-operate fully with the Republican revolutionary committee.

These resignations ended the government's dream of splitting the revolutionary ranks by divorcing the Socialists and their 300,000 workers with their terrible weapon of a general strike from the purely Republican element with their backing among the bourgeoisie and friendly soldiery.

The government announced that the municipal elections, the first in a series of elections that will end eventually in balloting for an assembly to amend the constitution, would take place on April 12 instead of March 29. Educational institutions, closed by the Berenguer government a month ago, are ordered reopened.

In his talk with correspondents Alfonso said he had done all he could to satisfy his people and that he was willing to give up almost everything but his crown, which, he added, was not his to give away, being his inheritance of which he is only the temporary holder.

BECAUSE of divided opposition William Hale Thompson won renomination by the Republicans for mayor of Chicago after one of the hottest primary contests that city has ever enjoyed. The attack on him was fierce and he would have been beaten by Judge John Lyle, "nemesis" of the gunmen and gangsters, had it not been for the candidacy of Alderman Albert who was supported by Senator Deneen and his dwindling faction. The hope of those Chicagoans who seek to eliminate Thompsonism now rests with Anton Cermak, who is the nominee of the Democrats.

President Cerro

COUNTER revolution broke out in Peru under the leadership of friends of the deposed president, Augusto Leguia, and threatened the regime of Provisional President Luis M. Sanchez Cerro. The uprising was quelled in Callao but the revolutionists seized Arequipa and set up a government under the name "Southern Junta." They were joined by considerable parts of the army and held control of southern Peru.

To prove the sincerity of his intentions in leading the August revolution, Cerro issued a proclamation declaring that he would not be a candidate for the presidency when the elections are held. This, he and his adherents thought, would pacify the Arequipa rebels and lead to peace through negotiations.

Lesson for March 15

JESUS AMONG FRIENDS AND FOES

GOLDEN TEXT—Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you.

LESSON TEXT—Luke 10:38-42; 11: 14-54.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Among His Friends.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus' Test of Friendship.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Friendship With Jesus.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Dealing With Friend and Foe.

I. Jesus in the Home of Friends (Luke 10:38-42).

There is no place where true character is so clearly revealed as at home.

1. His reception (v. 38). Jesus was received by Martha, as she was the head of the home. Jesus must have greatly appreciated the fact that there was one home in which he was welcome.

2. Mary sitting at Jesus' feet (v. 39). She, with fine spiritual discernment, knew that sitting at the Lord's feet and hearing his word was that which would most please him. He was more concerned with opportunity to reveal himself to human hearts than with the eating of well prepared meals. Mary's way of entertaining Jesus was more acceptable than that of Martha.

3. Martha cumbered about much serving (v. 40). Both sisters loved the Lord. It would be impossible to say which loved the more, but Martha was bent on providing a fine meal for him. Because she was trying to do so many things, she was on the verge of distraction, and found fault with Jesus for permitting Mary to leave the kitchen to listen to his teaching.

4. Jesus' answer (vv. 41, 42). (a) He rebuked Martha (v. 41). He did this most tenderly for he knew that she loved him sincerely. (b.) Defends Mary (v. 42.) He declared that but one thing was needful and that Mary had chosen that good part which could not be taken away from her. The one thing needful for every member of the race is a heart for the Lord which brings the individual to Jesus to hear his teaching.

II. Jesus Among Foes (11:14-54).

1. Charged with being in league with the devil (vv. 14-23). Being unwilling to receive him as the Son of God and yet unable to account for his mighty works, they declared that he was casting out demons through Beelzebub, the chief of the demons.

2. Refusal to believe his miracles (vv. 29-32). They asked for a sign to which he replied that they would have a sign from heaven in his death and resurrection. He reminded them, however, that their request showed unbelief surpassing that of the heathen queen of the South and the wicked people of Nineveh.

3. Wickedness denounced (vv. 37-54). He pronounced six woes upon those who were opposing him and seeking his destruction: three upon the Pharisees and three upon the lawyers.

a. The Pharisees (vv. 37-41). These he denounced for:

(1) Punctiliously observing minute rites while at the same time breaking the Ten Commandments. They carefully tithed the small herbs of the garden while practicing injustice with their fellow men and withholding love from God. He pointed out to them their attending to these external acts while their hearts were filled with wickedness. It was as absurd as merely washing the outside of an unclean cup.

(2) Desire for public recognition (v. 43). This is a common sin today. Love for titles of respect and positions of prominence is a very common sin.

(3) Feigning humility (v. 44). He compared their hypocrisy to graves which are on the ground and may be stepped upon unconsciously by some one who would thus be defiled.

b. The lawyers (vv. 45-54). The strictures of Jesus on the hypocritical Pharisees aroused the lawyers, one of whom indignantly declared, "Thou reproachest us also." In reply to this Christ pronounced three woes upon them:

(1) For placing burdensome requirements upon the people to which they themselves would not submit (v. 46). Religious rites should not be made irksome. (2) For the murder of God's prophets (vv. 47-51). He showed that their attitude toward him was the same as was shown to the prophets by their fathers. Jesus declared that their guilt was the same as that of their fathers and that their generation would be held responsible for all that the fathers had done. (8) For keeping back the knowledge of God by false interpretations of the Scripture (vv. 52-54).

Costs Much Money to Operate Radio Station

Very few people have any idea of the cost of operating a radio station. To install any kind of transmitting set with power up to 1,000 watts it would cost from $5,000 to $40,000. The science of the transmission of sound at the present time is developing so rapidly that a sending set that would be up to date today in six months would be obsolete. The broadcaster must pay studio and office rent of from $15,000 to $40,000 a year. The investment on a big station runs from $750,000 to $1,000,000. Pick-up equipment costs from $10,000 to $15,000. Line charges, that is, for telephone wires to transmit programs—cost approximates from $10,000 to $12,000 annually. Electricity amounts to about $1,500 a year, and there are a number of incidental expenses that run to about $15,000. Microphones cost at least $75.

As It Happens

If, as has been said, the weaker sex is the stronger today, it is because of the weakness of the stronger for the weaker.

Wood Resists Heat

By a special process, wood is said to have been made more flame-proof and fire-resistant than other fire-resisting material without the loss of characteristics that make wood desirable for interior and exterior uses, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. In a recent test, a wooden door, treated with the chemicals, withstood intense heat for a longer time than one of steel. This specially fireproofed wood has been used as a fire safeguard in the tower of the Seiler building in New York city.

RICHARD SCHUBERT AGAIN WINS SPELLING CONTEST

Vella Paul, Klemme Entrant Wins Fourth Place

The Hancock County Spelling contest was held Saturday, March 14 at Garner in the High School Assembly room by Supt. Baggs who was ably assisted by deputy Belle Peterson. Prof. Chas. Tomkins very graciously and credibly pronounced the words. There were three judges, Mrs. H. C. Meyer of Britt, Mrs. D. E. Keat of Britt and Mrs. Elmer Yohn of Garner

Sixty students from the rural, consolidated and independent school of the county participated in the contest. The meeting was opened by the song "America" which was sung by the audience with Prof. Tompkins leading. The students then spelled once around with easier words to get each pupil accustomed to all the conditions concerned. In this round the words "coming" and "order" were mispelled but did not count against anyone.

The following is a list of words mispelled in order:

courtesy	elasticity
influence	occupation
quickly	especial
medium	electrical memorandum	fictitious traffic	electrolysis acknowledged	seized
frequently	architecture receive	arctic inventory	appreciate fraternity	allegiance
plural	masculine acknowledge	ecclesiastical
supple	imagination
contemptible

There was a pause for intermission during which the audience stood and sang "Battle Hymn of the Republic". Robert Lucas of Garner gave a reading as did Ruth Paulson also of Garner.

During the next period the following words were mispelled:

buoyant	license
biscuit	coincide
barometer	criticise incidents	brigadier partition	assassinate
reservoir	liquefy
accelerate	significance sovereignty	phenomenal
allotment	accompany

When the last of these words had been spelled there were 12 studnts left—3 boys and 9 girls. These pupils all received prizes. The words they went down on were:

chimney	rhythm
occasional	promissory
miracle	dispensary
supersede	privileges
dahlia	erysipelas

Richard Schubert of Britt twp. No. 5 won first place and Ethel Bruins of Twin Lake twp. No. 6 took second place. Ethel mispelled "erysipelas' so Richard had to spell it correctly plus another word which was "subterranean" This is his 3rd year receiving a place. Last year he was first also. Ethel Bruins was in third place last year.

Klemme's entrant, Vella Paul, was fourth from the top going down on "dispensary"

The first prize was $3.00 plus $5 for expense money at the state contest at Des Moines. Second prize was $2.00 The other prize winners who all received one dollar each are:

Vella Paul - Klemme Independent
Veronica Liska - Hayfield Consol.

AROUND THE COUNTY WITH AGENT WEISS

COUNTY AGENT ADVISES THAT PIGS NEED CLEAN GROUND

Also Gives Advice On Best Rations For Starting Young Pigs

Farmers, now is the time to arrange clean pasture for the swine this year. If at all possible and in most cases it is, get your spring crop of pigs out on clean ground. The difference between a profitable and an unprofitable herd of hogs in many cases is due to the clean ground. Remember that your old hog lot may be badly infested with all the common diseases of hogs.

Then, too, remember that corn along is a poor ration for sows and litters. However, corn with protein added makes thrifty sows and litters. You cannot go wrong feeding tankage, oilmeal and alfalfa meal along with the corn. Mix the tankage, oilmean and alfalfa meal 2-1-1 or two parts tankage, one part oilmeal and one part alfalfa meal. As soon as the pigs are on good pasture you can discontinue the alfalfa meal but continue with tankage and oil meal in the same proportions.

Oil meal or corn oil meal or wheat middlings or soybean meal when fed as a lone protein supplement to the standard basal feeds are inadequate and not to be advised, however, when incorporated with tankage or fishmeal, or milk products or suitable leguminous pastures they are worthy of inclusion.

Remember that th ration is not complete unless a good mineral mixture is allowed before the sows and pigs at all times. You can mix your own mineral mixture and a good one for approximately $1.14 per 100 lbs Spent bone black or ground bone meal or bone ash with salt and calcium carbonate (limestone) mixed in this proportion—40-40-20—will give you a desirable mineral mixture To elaborate, take 40 pounds of either the spent bone black or ground bone meal or bone ash, 40 pounds also of ground limestone and 20 pounds of common salt to make 100 pounds of the mixture.

You should not become alarmed if you find that the sows and pigs do not eat so very much because one pound per month is enough per sow while one-fourth to one-half pound per pig per month is sufficient. Self feed both the protein supplement and the mineral but in seperate compartments of he self feeder.

Good feeding is but one of the main essentials of successful hog raising. Other things necessary are sufficient water, self watering being preferable. Furnish suitable shelter which provides warmth, dryness ventilation, shade and sunlight and quietness. Avoid damp floors and slippery cold pens. Direct sunhine is an essential to robust health.

Good legume pastures and hog production go hand in hand. If you cannot supply good pasture for the hogs you are not going to reap the profits you should from your hog enterprise.

Test your legume ground for acidity because legumes such as alfalfa and sweet clover will not grow on acid soils. Limestone is the basis of soil fertility. It increases stand and growth of legumes; limestone makes more plant food available to crops; limestone encourages growth of helpful soil bacteria, supplies calcium, a plant food to soils; tends to check certain plant diseases and insects; opens up heavy soils by long continued use; never causes injury to soils or crops and enriches farm, farmer and farming community.

Remember that if the soil needs liming the important thing is to put on limestone, regardless of the time of the year.

METHODIST CHURCH NOTES
H. E. Whyte, Pastor

A delegation of thirt yof our Epworth Leaguers attended the Subdistrict Rally at Clear Lake Monday evening. A good time and a profitable and interesting program was enjoyed by all.

A County wide training school, under the direction of the Iowa Council of Religious Education, will be held in Garner, March 23-27. Credits from the International Council of Religious Education will be given to anyone who completes a course of ten lectures in the five evenings. Two lectures, divided by an assembly, is the program of each evening.

The training school is conducted not alone for the active teachers of the Sunday Schools but for all workers of both Sunday Schools and churches who desire to get better acquainted with the modern materials and methods of up-to-date church work. This opportunity is on unusual one for the people of Hancock County

The teachers. experts in their work, have been selected because of their fitness to teach the courses which are being offered. Mr. Walter Hutton of Des Moines will teach "Adult Materials and Methods". Dr R. J. Montgomery of Grinnell will teach "Church School Administration", Mrs. Walter Hutton of Des Moines will teach "Training in Worship and the Devotional Life" and Mrs Will Baker of Lakeview will teach "Primary Materials and Methods".

Registration for the entire course is only seventy-five cents. It is optional whether a pupil of the school buy the suggested text book. The school convenes Monday, March 23 at 7:30 o'clock at the Garner Methodist Church. The Reverend M. L. Sunderlin is dean of the school

It is hoped that a number of our Sunday School teachers and workers both from Klemme and Liberty may be able to attend.

A similar school with the same credit will be held after Easter at Clear Lake, which will be entirely under the direction of the Methodist Churches of the Sub-district. This school will meet only one night a week for five weeks, which may prove to be a better arrangement for some.

On next Tuesday, March 24, the state workers who are in charge of the Garner School of Rel. Education will be at the Liberty Church for an all day conference with Sunday School workers. This work is interdenominational and any church in the vicinity is welcome to bring its workers. Each one is urged to bring some sort of a cover dish and sandwiches for the dinner which will be served in cafeteria fashion.

On Sunday evening, March 29 we are to have with us for the evening service hour a quartet of Negroes from Des Moines. They will give a concert of sacred music, including a number of spirituals. Their program will be altogether religious and very appropriate for the Lenten season. Do not fail to hear them. Keep the date in mind.

We are endeavoring to make all of our Worship service especially helpful during the Lenten season. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

Horrors of Russian Prison Camp

Helsingfors.—A young specialist in agricultural science who recently managed to escape from the North Russian timber lands arrived here recently and described conditions there.

The prisoners in the camp to which he belonged had to live in a wooden shed, the roof of which consisted of loose pieces of wood covered with mud. When the snow melted, or when there was rain, black, muddy water dripped constantly on the sleeping workers, who then had to get up at 5 a. m. to start their work, soaked to the skin. Their clothing consisted of rags, entirely insufficient to protect them against the cold of a nine-month winter.

Only One-Fourth Criminals.

Of the prisoners about one-fourth were criminals and the rest were guilty of political offenses. Almost all of them were forced to work in the forests. The work was set on a task basis, the usual assignment consisting of cutting, trimming and piling 35 logs a day. Strong and well-trained young workers managed to get through their task in 14 hours, but the average time was 18 hours.

In the morning when going to work each man received 800 grams of moist bread, which was almost uneatable, and no other food was issued until the day's task was finished. On returning to their shed the prisoners were given a little soup, made from salt fish, and some hot water to drink.

Almost daily some workers would fail at his task. Such unfortunates were beaten with sticks, or put under arrest in an icy cellar, stripped of all clothing but their shirts. Or else they would get no food at all and be sent out to do the task the next day. Those who were subject to such punishments of course were completely exhausted, but this was not accepted as an excuse for failure. Fresh punishment was applied on the following days, so that these slaves were actually being slowly beaten to death.

Epidemics Kill Thousands.

Refusal to work resulted in immediate execution. The same refers to attempts to escape. Once three peasants endeavored to get away. The chekists, on skis, followed their tracks, shot them from behind, and brought the bodies back. The three naked and mutilated bodies were deposited for three days outside the threshold of the shed, so that all workers had to step over them.

No wages or other remuneration was paid to these workers. On account of the miserable conditions all kinds of epidemics were raging, killing thousands. If at any time a prisoner survived a three-year term a fresh reason for continued punishment was invented so that hardly anyone who had been sent to these slavery districts had a chance of getting out alive.

In the famous Solovjetsk district, near the island of that name, there were eight divisions with 50,000 prisoners each. Thus there were 400,000 slaves in the district, and in the Archangel division the figure was certain to be above this, the escaped prisoner said. Altogether, therefore, there are well over 1,000,000 slaves working in the Soviet lumber camps.

Getting One's Name Into the Paper

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

When I was fourteen or so I became acquainted with the editor of our local newspaper. The editor was a shrewd young fellow who was mainly concerned in increasing his circulation at a minimum cost and in developing an interest in advertising among the local merchants. He thought it might be helpful in the accomplishment of the first purpose if he featured the celebrities and near celebrities in the rural neighborhood from which I came, by appointing me as his weekly correspondent from that community. I was to receive the newspaper free of charge for my services together with a supply of stamped envelopes and print paper upon which to write the romance and tragedy of the locality.

I was a novice in the art of journalism. I knew, of course, that births, marriages, deaths, cyclones, and other disasters of irregular occurrence should be recounted and I was familiar with the conventional phrases in which these stories should be told, but it was a healthy and a quiet community and I knew that these outstanding events would be of comparatively rare occurrence.

"What shall I write about?" I inquired.

"Nothing happens very often where we live."

"What people want most," the editor replied, "is to see their names in the paper. Get in the names. Look around and see what the neighbors are doing, and if possible what they are doing well, and speak about it—but always names correctly spelled and with the right initials. Nobody will forgive you if the name is wrong."

I learned, slowly, I suppose. Houses were being painted and hedges trimmed, and grain harvested, and people coming across the township to spend Sunday with an old neighbor. There were simple social functions—parties and singing school and spelling bees and occasionally some one would die or get married and give me a chance to spread myself journalistically. It was the names which counted. The editor was right.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By WALTER TRUMBULL

When the Grand Duchess Marie of Russia, now in business, arrived in the United States, her baggage consisted mainly of a guitar and a Russian typewriter. Some friends, who were away from the city, had arranged to give her the temporary use of their eleven room Park avenue apartment, which was furnished, but destitute of servants. The first morning, other friends sent a maid around to cook her breakfast, but the second morning she had to do it herself. This was well enough, except for the fact that she had never before seen a gas stove or coffee percolator. She got the elevator boy to light the gas stove, but the coffee was a failure. After that, they got her a maid recently landed from Finland. The grand duchess could speak seven languages, but Finnish was not one of them. The maid could speak one language, and that was Finnish. The maid had a husband who spoke English, so when the Grand duchess wished to communicate with her, she wrote a note to the husband and the maid took it home to have it translated.

The titled Russian, a very good looking woman, always will remember her first meeting with a New York policeman. She doesn't know exactly what he expected, but she evidntly impressed him favorably. Looking her over, he exclaimed:

"So you're a grand duchess! Well, you're not so bad."

John Mulholland, the magician, tells me that when you use thousands of packs of new cards, you occasionally find a pack which has been incorrectly assembled. Giving a performance recently, he allowed a member of the gathering to select a card from a freshly opened deck and then asked him if he was sure he knew what card he held.

"I certainly do," said the spectator, "and you should know, too. There is another just like it on the bottom of that deck." And it was true. The deck contained two jacks of spades.

A woman took her young daughter to a beauty parlor. The child heard some conversation concerning the plucking of eyebrows, but got them confused with eyelashes, so, after going home, she got hold of some tweezers and pulled most of hers out. The results were not favorable.

Max Rosen, the violinist, was a poor Rumanian boy, living on the East Side of New York. His father was a musician and taught him to play so well that his talent was recognized by patrons of music and he was sent abroad to study with Leopold Auer. At the age of fifteen, Rosen made his debut with the Philharmonic orchestra in Dresden.

Battling Disease Among Eskimos

Sydney, N. S.—The Eskimos of the Canadian Arctic are today reasonably immune from the threat of racial extinction, which has confronted them in recent years.

Originally a hardy race, the Eskimos' health deteriorated rapidly after their first contacts with white civilization, due to their adoption of the softer foods used by the whites.

Medical experts of the Canadian government spent most of last year in the Far North, however, and now on their return announce that the health of the natives has been reasonably safeguarded once more.

An outbreak of influenza took a heavy toll of life in several Eskimo settlements last summer, but blood tests, taken by the medical men, resulted finally in checking the ravages of the plague.

Dr. L. D. Livingstone, chief medical health officer for the Canadian department of the interior, on the return of the government patrol ship Beothic, after a 9,000-mile voyage through Arctic wastes, tells a stirring story of life in the land of the midnight sun, and of the task of safeguarding the health of both the natives and of the Royal Canadian mounted police detachments.

Doctor Hugh A. Stewart, another member of the expedition, tells of making a 950-mile journey by dog team to Pond's Inlet, a trip which took 52 days, and which has only twice been accomplished by an unaccompanied white man. A week after starting on his trek he was forced to return to his starting point when his tent was torn to ribbons in a blizzard, and for two nights his only shelter was the rags of the tent.

At the present time points as far north as Pond's inlet are in perpetual darkness, Doctor Stewart states. The sun just shows as a red rim above the horizon, creating a twilight effect similar to that of the dawn hour; and then sinks again.

The oldest structure in the Western hemisphere erected by white men is in Santo Domingo. It was erected in 1509 by Diego Columbus, son of Christopher, and a large portion of its walls still stand, although in a dilapidated state. THEY ADOPTED TRIPLETS

By FANNIE HURST

(©, 1931, McClure Newspaper Syndicate.) WNU Service.

ALL her life Helen Dougherty had craved leisure, modish, up-to-date surroundings, a sure income, freedom from the bickering of a large family of children, and a good husband.

Strangely enough, she achieved them all at a time when, to the casual observer, she was just about to become middle-aged and wedded to the destiny of her position as chief operator in a telephone exchange.

It all happened with the velocity, the glamor and the dramatics of a fairy tale. One evening, walking home from the telephone exchange to the crowded apartment she shared with her parents, two married sisters, a brother or two and some growing, squalling nieces and nephews, she ran into one of her brothers-in-law standing in front of a large commercial hotel talking to a man to whom he had been trying to sell a life insurance policy.

That was how Helen met Fred Sloan. After Fred caught one glimpse of Helen, who had reddish hair and reddish eyes and a pleasant upturned nose, her brother-in-law sold him the life insurance, but only after Fred Sloan had succeeded in getting himself invited to the home of the Doughertys for dinner.

Six weeks later, after a whirlwind courtship, Fred and Helen were married in the parlors of the hotel in front of which they had met and in which Fred had lived for the fifteen years of his bachelorhood. In a jiffy, as it were, leaving her friends, her family, the girls at the telephone exchange astounded, Helen Dougherty, who had worked since she was fourteen, found herself with the four requisites of her dreams—leisure, modish, up-to-date surroundings, a sure income, freedom from the bickering of a large family of children, and a good husband.

Fred was not a rich man in the modern sense of that word, but he had an income that would enable them to live as all her life Helen had dreamed of living. They were able to afford, without encroaching on their capital, a modern, well-furnished suite of rooms in an apartment hotel that faced the park. For the first time in her life, Helen Dougherty, who was a tailor-made type of person that had always been obliged to wear "ready-mades," blossomed forth in svelte, chic suits designed especially to her figure. The rings on her fingers were good diamonds mounted in platinum. Her wrist watch was jeweled and her silver fox the best that money could buy.

The Sloans could afford to spend three months a year at Atlantic City in one of the pretentious hostelries overlooking the ocean. Fred loved the sea, and the boardwalk gayety of the pleasure resort amused him. He was proud of Helen. He liked to walk with her into the gaudy dining rooms or ride beside her in the wicker rolling chairs up and down the beach. They were a contented pair, living comfortably on their income, coming and going as they willed, occasionally willing to take a trip to Niagara Falls or Chicago, or a boat ride to Boston.

Helen had married well.

It was pleasant to be in a position to help her family. To see to it that a warm new coat replaced her mother's shabby one, that her father, after his long, dull day as watchman in a warehouse, could come home to the solid comforts of radio, easy-chair and good cigars. The nieces and nephews came in for their share, too. Fred was generous.

It seemed to Helen that there was a constant paeon of thanksgiving going on in her heart over this blessed delivery from the wrangling, overcrowded, niece-and-nephew-cluttered environment of the stuffy little flat she had called home up to the day of that momentous meeting with Fred Sloan in front of the commercial hotel.

It became inevitable, after a while, that Helen and Fred, living the carefree lives of a pair of carefree nomads, should sink into the pleasant routine of hotel life. More and more, the holiday-aspect of Atlantic City attracted the pair. Fred's philosophy of life was an easy-going one. "We're here today, gone tomorrow. Get all you can out of it today."

The Sloan suite in the gaudy hotel overlooking the ocean came to mean home. The gay, transient holiday crowds came and went, but the Sloans remained, meeting a lobby civilization, as it poured in and out. Every evening at eight, Fred climbed into his dinner clothes and Helen powdered her white neck, dressed herself in modish chiffons or taffetas and descended en decollete to the dining room. It was unbelievably pleasant, eating to the strains of good music, surrounded by well-dressed people, deferred to by waiters. The Sloans fattened a little with well-being.

It seemed to Helen, so quickly does the human mind accustom itself to new formula of habit, that the old noise-and-nerve-racked days belonged to another era of her consciousness. She used to snuggle her hand under her husband's on their twilight chairrides along the boardwalk that ran parallel to the pounding showy ocean, and ask him to give her a good pinch around the wrist.

"That's for reality, Fred. Sometimes it all just doesn't seem real. Life is so pleasant now. So—relaxed."

That pleased Fred more than he could express to her. It gave him enormous sense of the well-being of the producer. He thrilled with the consciousness of being good-provider to this nice dear girl who was his.

"Fred," she asked him once, again on a chair ride, tucked under rugs, along the curving shore, "do you think we are getting smug?"

Smug? Fred was not given to introspection.

"You know, Fred—kind of—fat-minded."

"I like you plump," said the literal Fred and kissed her on the cheek.

"Fred dear! not in public!"

"Why not? Let them know how sweet my gel is. Where will we eat tonight, honey. I could do with one of the Shelbourne's big, juicy sirloins smothered in fried onions."

Little rills alongside—Helen's tongue began to run. After all, it was pleasant just to live, surrendering oneself to creature enjoyments. Life had been a long and arduous affair for her. She had done her share in her time to contribute to the well being of others. She was doing her share now. Part of her placid happiness was the knowledge that her father was no longer obliged to spend the long nights through, dragging his weary old frame through tours of inspection of a warehouse.

Thanks to Fred, bless him; thanks to her, the old gentleman was free to end his days in leisure and a certain amount of ease.

It was hard not to feel just a little smug with happiness, even if the vagrant thought did stray across her consciousness occasionally that she was fast becoming of the hotel leisure class of idle women whose major interests are lap dogs and bridge whist.

But so low beneath the surface of her consciousness ran all this, that it scarcely left a consciousness dent.

So that what happened subsequently came as much out of a clear sky to Helen herself as it did to Fred, who had come to realize, after his first year of marriage to this big, amiable woman, that he could refuse her nothing.

One morning they had taken a motor ride along the beautiful coast line to visit an orphan asylum that was known for its picturesque location and its worthy work. A group of triplets had just been received by the organization, two tow-headed little girls and a red-haired boy. Healthy specimens of youngsters, unique chiefly because of the trilogy.

There was never a moment's doubt in the mind of Helen Sloan, when she looked at these three, that she wanted them. Their appeal to her was swift, sure and devastating. At first, the idea had struck Fred as too grotesque for consideration. But before they left that institution two hours later, he had been won over to the consideration of an idea that up to that day would have appeared fantastic.

Eight weeks later three small children, aged four years, four months and two days, were formally handed over for legal adoption to Mr. and Mrs. Fred Sloan.

It is impossible for the Sloans, on the budget of their income, any longer to maintain the suite of expensive rooms in the sumptuous hotel. The Sloans now occupy a pleasant six-room apartment on the upper west side of New York. It is a noisy apartment, filled with the din of three children.

Helen's costumes have gone off a bit in their tailor-made precision. Fred thinks it all a great joke. To his amazement, the former idle days in the sumptuous hotels seem incredibly vapid to him in retrospect.

Faith of the Child

Know you what it is to be a child? It is to be something very different from the man of today. It is to have a spirit yet streaming from the waters of baptism; it is to believe in love, to believe in loveliness, to believe in beliefs; it is to be so little that the elves can reach to whisper in your ear; it is to turn pumpkins into coaches and mice into horses, lowliness into loftiness, and nothing into everything, for each child has its fairy godmother in its own soul; it is to live in a nutshell and count yourself the king of infinite space; it is

To see a world in a grain of sand,
And a heaven in a wild flower;
Hold infinity in the palm of your hand
And eternity in an hour.

—Francis Thompson's "Essay on Shelley."

Tells Time by Birds

Clocks are not necessary to give the time in the morning if one understands the songs of birds, according to a German naturalist who has just completed a schedule of offerings by feathered songsters. He says the chaffinch sings at about one-thirty on summer mornings, and the blackcap calls an hour later. Between two-thirty and three o'clock the quail give their call, while the hedge sparrows are heard about thirty minutes later. The blackbirds are next, followed by larks, the black-headed titmouse, and finally the sparrows start between five and five-thirty.

Sunday School Lesson

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Member of Faculty, Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(©, 1931, Western Newspaper Union.)

Lesson for March 22

THE USE AND ABUSE OF GOD'S GIFTS.

(Temperance Lesson)

GOLDEN TEXT—And be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit.

LESSON TEXT—Luke 12:13-48.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Tells Us How to Use God's Good Gifts.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Tells Us How to Use God's Good Gifts.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Sin of Drunkenness and Gluttony.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Enslaving Power of Strong Drink.

I. Warning Against Covetousness (vv. 13-15).

1. The occasion (v. 13). The occasion of this warning was the request of one of the company that Jesus be the umpire regarding a disputed estate. Two brothers were in trouble over an inheritance.

2. Jesus' reply (v. 14). He said, "Man, who made me a judge or a divider over you?" He refused to enter the sphere of the civil law. Christ's mission was pre-eminently spiritual.

3. The warning (v. 15). The clear implication is that if due attention is given to inculcating right principles in the hearts of the people, civic and economic problems will largely adjust themselves.

II. The Parable of a Rich Fool (vv. 16-21).

The parable of this rich planter shows clearly that to be concerned with earthly riches while neglecting God is the height of folly. Observe:

1. The increase of his goods (v. 16). This clearly implies that his riches were rightfully obtained, for the ground brought forth plentifully.

2. His perplexity (v. 17). His land was producing more than his barns would hold. He was at a loss to know what to do. No thrifty man wants to see the legitimate fruits of his toil perish. If he had possessed right views of life and a sense of stewardship before God, he would have seen that his barns had enough for his personal needs and then have distributed the surplus to the needy.

3. His fatal choice (vv. 18, 19). He chose to enlarge his barns and give up his life to ease and luxury. He made plans without consulting God.

4. His awful indictment (vv. 20, 21). God called him a fool. His plans were cut short by an immediate death sentence.

III. The Certain Cure for Anxiety (vv. 22-34).

Having shown the folly of rich men who gained gold and lost God, Jesus now urged the disciples to trust God and dismiss all anxious care.

1. The argument (vv. 22, 23). It is summed up in one brief sentence. "The life is more than meat and body is more than raiment."

2. The illustrations (vv. 24-28). (a) God's care for the fowls (vv. 24-26). The ravens do not sow nor reap. They have not storehouse nor barn yet they live, for God feeds them. If God does not forget the fowls, certainly he will do more for his children. (b) God's care for the flowers of the field (vv. 27, 28). If God is so careful of the flowers which appear but for a day, how much more will he clothe his children?

3. The exhortations (vv. 29-34). (a) The getting of food and clothes should not be man's chief concern. (b) Seek the kingdom of God (v. 31). Those who make God's kingdom first shall have all their needs supplied (Phil. 4:19). (c) Be not afraid (v. 32). God's good pleasure is upon his own, and all good things he will give. (d) Practice self-denial in order to be able to give to those in need (vv. 33, 34).

IV. Be Ready for the Coming of the Lord (vv. 35-48).

Having warned the disciples against the acquisition of worldly goods while forgetting God, and shown them the needlessness of anxiety for food and clothing, he showed them the blessedness of being in a state of readiness when the Lord shall come. This attitude of heart he made clear by two parables:

1. That of the returning lord (vv. 35-37). The Lord will be so pleased with those who are waiting for him that he will take delight in sitting at the banquet with them and even serving them.

2. The thief in the night (vv. 38-40). This parable shows that the time of the Lord's coming is not known. The proper thing is to be ready.

3. Reward will be given to the faithful (vv. 41-48). The faithful servant will be promoted at the coming of the Lord. Awful judgment will be meted out upon the unfaithful servant.

"First Aid—Home Remedy Week" Coming

Chicago.—First Aid-Home Remedy Week, Sterling Products' "better merchandising and greater advertising baby," celebrates its tenth anniversary March 15-21. Druggists everywhere will co-operate. "Fill That Medicine Chest Now!" is the slogan of action. The National Association of Retail Druggists sponsored the event in 1922, and with the National Wholesale Druggists' Association and National Association of Retail Drug Clerks have, with other organizations, massed their energies for success of this movement for the abolition of much needless suffering and often the salvage of life.

Dr. W. E. Weiss was first to okay the idea as a splendid aid to preparedness for unexpected illness or accident. This is stressed as sensible insurance for immediate relief.

The every-spring festival of sales is a fixture of housecleaning time. Sterling Products is giving a tenth anniversary surprise party to every druggist in America—for the Dominion as well as the States endorses this idea of a more intensive advertising effort in Drugdom. Replacing the old streamers there has been adopted a colorful poster representing a filled medicine chest displaying the slogan of each past success: "Fill That Medicine Chest Now."

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription makes weak women strong. No alcohol. Sold by druggists in tablets or liquid.—Adv.

Alarm Over Possible Extinction of Python

Public-spirited South Africans have recently started a movement to restrict, and possibly even prohibit, the export of skins of native pythons and monitor lizards. The demand for snake skins comes largely from American and European manufacturers of women's bags and shoes, who in the past two or three years have practically exhausted the skins available in South America and the Far East. Such increasingly large orders are being sent to South Africa that hundreds of natives have gone into the business of hunting the python and lizard.

Wholesale slaughter of the South African python is becoming a serious economic problem, it is said, because the python and the monitor lizard are the only animals in the cane-producing areas that will destroy plague-carrying rodents. The python is non-venomous and does not attack human beings except when fighting for its life.

France and Italy Reach Agreement as to Their Naval Strength—Seventy-First Congress Comes to an End.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

A. Henderson

DIPLOMATS and financiers, working steadily and persistently, have brought about an accord between France and Italy on the question of relative naval strength, and the probable result will be that the three-power London naval treaty will become a five-power pact. Thus the French and Italians will give up the idea of starting a building program that would compel Great Britain to increase her naval forces under the "escalator" clause of the treaty, and the United States and Japan would be relieved of the fear that their relative strength would not be maintained without a lively resumption of building.

Arthur Henderson, British foreign secretary, was most active in the final stages of the negotiations between France and Italy, making trips to Rome and Paris, and is given credit for excellent work. But it is admitted that the groundwork for the agreement was laid by Hugh S. Gibson, American ambassador to Belgium, who for several months had been laboring to bring the dispute to an end. Acting under personal orders from President Hoover, he held a series of private talks with Mussolini, Tardieu, Briand and others, and transmitted their various proposals to Rome and Paris and finally to the British.

The financial end of the accord consists in a long term loan to Italy, to be made by French and American bankers, which will really be a war debt moratorium in disguise. The Fascist government will receive perhaps three and a half billion dollars, which sum, it is said, will "save Italy from bankruptcy and put the country on its feet." Specifically, the loan will be used to retire and convert internal debt obligations, $1,820,000,000 of which fell due on October 1 last. Mussolini's previous efforts to obtain long term loans from American and French bankers had failed because, largely, of the naval dispute with Francee.

While the terms of the Franco-Italian agreement were temporarily withheld from the public, it was learned in Paris that it provides that French naval superiority over Italy be reduced from 240,00 tons to 190,000 tons, most of the reduction coming from projected submarines and supersubmarines. It was agreed that the battleship tonnage allotted at the Washington naval conference would not be used for ships of more than 25,000 tons. France obtained the right to build three 23,300-ton vessels of the super-cruiser type.

In return for superiority in global or total tonnage, it is believed that France gives Italy a slight superiority in light cruisers and torpedo destroyers, but retains supremacy in submarines. It was understood that Italy demanded the sacrifice of super-submarines in the French program and that France made the concession because its coastal submarines are sufficient for its present needs. France and Italy, it is understood, agreed on parity in 10,000-ton cruisers.

John W. Davis

LEGAL proceedings are under way in Washington in the contest between President Hoover and the senate over the right of Chairman George Otis Smith of the power commission to hold that office, and the senate is represented by John W. Davis, who was Democratic candidate for the Presidency in 1924. He was selected for the job by a subcommittee of the judiciary committee composed of Senators Norris, Walsh and Steimer. The proceedings are expected to add another chapter to the history of constitutional clashes between the executive and legislative branches of the government.

Selection of Mr. Davis as counsel for the senate assures a spectacular court test, with the former Presidential candidate on one side and possibly Attorney-General Mitchell on the other. The final decision probably will be rendered by the Supreme court.

WITH a filibuster in the senate and rather uproarious gaiety in the house, the seventy-first congress came to an end at noon, March 4. During its life it carried out fairly well President Hoover's program of legislation, despite frequent acrimonious clashes with the Chief Executive since last December. It is unnecessary to recount these disputes, for every one is familiar with them. In only two major affairs—the nomination of Judge Parker to the Supreme court and the recent veterans' bonus loan act—was the President defeated.

The important items of legislation during the third session included these:

Routine annual appropriation bills carrying more than $5,250,000,000.

Emergency construction program, providing $116,000,000 for speeding up public work, including rivers and harbors, highway construction and other federal improvements.

Relief for drought-stricken areas, including $20,000,000 for food loans, provided in measures embodying a $65,000,000 loan fund; $2,000,000 for rural sanitation activities; and $3,500,000 of unexpended balances in funds for relief of flood-stricken states.

Program of federal public building construction increased by $100,000,000.

Series of unemployment relief measures enacted, contemplating federal unemployment census, long-term planning of public construction to meet emergencies and federal co-operation in unemployment agency activities.

Additional soldier hospitalization facilities afforded in $20,000,000 program.

Naval modernization bill, authorizing $30,000,000 to remodel battleships Louisiana, Idaho and New Mexico, to meet standards prescribed by the 1922 Washington arms conefrence.

The seventy-first congress earned the one distinction of being the heaviest spending of all peace time congresses. In all, it appropriated approximately $10,000,000,000 for government uses.

IN ITS closing days the congress enacted the Muscle Shoals legislation which would put the government into the power business, but President Hoover vetoed the measure, sending in a long and well argued message. The senate sustained the veto, the vote being 49 to 34, and the bill was dead. Mr. Hoover had predicted he would be accused of favoring the power trust, and members of congress did accuse him of this, and the incident, it was said, made it certain that the power controversy would be one of the major issues of the next Presidential campaign.

Mr. Hoover also failed to sign the Wagner bill for federal co-operation with the states in establishing a national system of employment exchange. It was understood he would "pocket veto" this measure, which would bring the number of his vetoes to fifteen.

H. H. Curran

IF YOU are to take the word of Henry H. Curran, president of the Association Against Prohibition, a majority of the people of the United States are now ready and willing to vote for the repeal of the Eighteenth amendment. In his annual report to the directors and 360,000 members of the association, Mr. Curran declared that the dry cause had not advanced an inch during 1930, while the wet movement had registered important gains. He asserted that the November election doubled the wet representation in the house and raised the senate wet group from 15 two years ago, to 22 at present. He said the house now has a wet vote of 160, compared with 76 in 1928.

SECRETARY of Agriculture Hyde denies that he is to blame for delay in distributing the $20,000,000 drought relief fund. In a letter replying to a resolution introduced by Senator Caraway asking why Mr. Hyde had not begun the distribution, the secretary said:

"I have the honor to inform the senate that because of the extended debate upon the appropriation of $20,000,000 contained in the Interior department bill, and because of the uncertainty as to the provisions of the act, it was not possible to work out the administration and accounting problems entailed until the act was finally passed and its provisions definitely known."

He explained the machinery which the department had set up in order to distribute loans through intermediate credit organizations and directly to the farmer.

"There exists now no reason why application for loans may not now be received and payment made shortly thereafter," he concluded.

Major Royce

MAJ. Ralph Royce of the army air corps is being congratulated on the announcement that he has been awarded the Mackay trophy for 1930. This is in recognition of the "Arctic patrol" which he led through severe winter weather from Selfridge field, Michigan, to Spokane, Wash., and return, in January, 1930. It was a severe test of the skill and stamina of the pilots and the stability of the planes and was successfully carried through.

The trophy, which is competed for annually by United States army officers under War department rules, was first presented 18 years ago to the Aero Club of America by Clarence H. Mackay. The National Aeronautical association, successor to the Aero Club of America, is present custodian of the trophy for the War department.

CHAIRMAN RASKOB told the Democratic national committee at its meeting in Washington all about the wet policy which he thought the party should adopt, but said he would not ask action on his suggested platform until the next meeting. Dry members from the South vigorously opposed Raskob's views or any consideration of them by the committee. It was decided that a $10,000,000 campaign fund should be raised.

LOW bid for the general contract on the Hoover dam and power plant in Boulder canyon was submitted in Denver by a combination of western construction firms—the Six Companies, Inc., of San Francisco, and the government engineers recommended that this bid of $48,890,995.50 be accepted by Secretary of the Interior Wilbur. Work on the project, the biggest engineering job ever undertaken in this country, probably will be started before the end of March.

Government officials, although asserting work would be hastened so unemployment conditions in the Southwest would be relieved, warned workers against a general migration to the Nevada-Arizona line dam site as there were 10,000 laborers on hand at Las Vegas, Nev. Estimates for construction forces ranged from 2,000 to 2,500 men at work at one time when the program gets into full stride.

Gen. Jadwin

ONE of the most eminent engineers of the American army, and indeed of the nation, passed on when Lieut. Gen. Edgar Jadwin, retired chief of the army engineering corps and chairman of the interocean canal commission, died at Gorgas hospital in Panama City. While in Ancon preparing to go to Nicaragua to survey the possibilities of a Nicaraguan canal, he was stricken with apoplexy, and a cerebral hemorrhage ended his life.

General Jadwin, who was born in Honesdale, Pa., in 1865, was graduated from West Point in 1890 and had a brilliant career in the engineering corps for nearly forty years, retiring in 1929.

He served in the Spanish-American war and the World war, but was best known for his peacetime work in the United States and in the Canal Zone. The Jadwin plan of flood control formulated after the disastrous Mississippi valley floods of 1927 was the army officer's most important work. The plan called for expenditure of $325,000,000 and was opposed in congress, but finally passed with administration support.

VICEROY LORD IRWIN and Mahatma Gandhi, both making concessions, reached an agreement for peace in India, and the civil disobedience movement that had lasted for a year came to an end. The Nationalists looked on the pact as a triumph for the doctrine of non-violence. The British government, though it yields considerable, probably gets none the worst of the bargain. By the terms of the agreement, it is understood, the Nationalists abandon their resistance movement and will work for qualified dominion status in the second round table conference. In return, their imprisoned members will be released and most of the confiscated property will be returned; they are permitted to conduct boycotts that do not aim specifically at British goods, and the poor natives along the coast are given the right to make their own salt.

The most important gain for the British was the point in which the Nationalists agreed to confine themselves at the next round table conference to the specified scope of constitutional questions elucidated by the first round table meeting in London. This commits Gandhi to the principle of a federation of Indian responsibility, but with British safeguards covering finance, defense, foreign affairs, the position of minorities and the discharge of India's national debts.

SIR OSWALD MOSLEY, wealthy British socialist, and his wife, Lady Cynthia, have broken with the Laborites and formed a new party of their own which asks for 400 candidates in the next election. The Mosleys especially attack the unemployment policy of the MacDonald government.

AL CAPONE, Chicago's public enemy No. 1, did not fare so well when he ran afoul of the federal judiciary there. Judge Wilkerson sentenced the notorious gang leader to six months in jail for contempt of court in excusing his non-appearance in court some time ago by pleas of illness at Miami. The case was appealed, Capone being released under bond.

SENATOR Arthur Capper's committee on food prices reported that it found "an alarming tendency toward the monopolistic control of the food of the nation by a small group of powerful corporations and combinations," the tendency being especially strong in the case of bread and milk. A careful scrutiny by the federal trade commission and the Department of Justice was recommended.

TWO new governments within a week for Peru! First a navy group forced Sanchez Cerro to resign and named Chief Justice Ricardo Elias provisional president. Then along came a bunch of officers and troops loyal to Cerro and out went Elias and his friends. The new army junta was headed by Col. Gustave Jimenez.

NOVELTY EFFECTS IN STRAWS POPULAR FOR SPRING WEAR

Some Novelty Straws.

ONE CANNOT get away from plaids and stripes and color contrasts and novelty effects of all sorts—they are in the very air, even in the millinery realm where the new and extremely popular straws are as novel as genius can devise them.

The two-or-more color idea, which is being so conspicuously featured in fabrics for the costume, is reflected throughout the new straws whether they be in the form of braids, bandings or bodies. It is possible to get as smooth or as rough a straw as one may wish, and many of the bands and braids used for the initial spring hats have high-lustered cellophane interwoven with them.

Outstanding interest centers about gingham and plaid straw effects with tweedlike versions presenting an arresting theme for the smart suit hat. Such combinations as navy and white, black and beige, and also red and white, are in the lead.

Ribbon trims have come in to their own again and the use of clever feather novelties is exploited by all the best milliners. The hats in the picture are highly representative of what's what for wear with milady's chic jacket-suit or new spring coat.

The first model is one of the new novelty straws of fine satiny finish in a tweedy patterning. You may vision it in brown and beige, navy and white, or black and white. Its one-side long brim and its ribbon trim in striking two-color contrast are significant as to style trends.

Note the amusing little feathers sprouting out from the center of the crown of the hat to the right at the top. Back-crown trimmings such as this are very smart.

Again a tweedlike straw for the center hat, this time with a novel arrangement of ribbon the pleated crescent-shaped frill at the back solving the problem of an ungainly hairline at the nape of the neck.

The last model is made of wide banding formed of red and white straw together with black cellophane, this striking color contrast being typical of the effects which prevail both in fabric and in straws.

Stunning Semi-Tailored Costume.

Fashions are tremendously interesting this spring. Not for many a season have the details which style the costume been so versatile, so refreshingly original and so altogether charming.

If accent is placed on one phase of the mode more than another, the emphasis falls on color. Whether your taste runs to the conservative or the bizarre, fashion demands that the color scheme of your costume down to the slightest accessory be worked to a nicety.

For the stunning semitailored two-piece in the picture, beige with brown is the chosen theme. A beige woolen of spongy weave is the material, brown, flat caracul is the fur which travels diagonally across the short jacket, and the story of this perfect spring outfit concludes with a hat of brown felt and dainty kid shoes in the identical shade of brown.

Attention is especially called to the single large square lapel, the diagonal fastening and the belt which styles this short jacket, for they are details of outstanding importance. For frocks as well as coats, jackets and the blouse, diagonal effects are being played up in every conceivable way. The same may be said in regard to the big square lapels which register full on the new style program.

Referring again to the color question, while there is no doubt that the present mood is for vivid effects which have to do with startling contrasts, at the same time there is no lack of interest in carefully conceived combinations which artfully blend related tones and tints.

The program for spring records such unusual color alliances as navy, white and gray, or brown, pistachio, green and yellow, also black, white and red, while brown, turquoise and pale beige is quoted as one of the most successful tricolor effects of the season.

Trimming the smart woolens with plaid or stripe is also made a feature of the new modes. Usually it is a novel scarf which says "it" loudly with color, with the jacket lining and other details uniting in a chorus of plaids or stripes or whatever the motif may be. Perhaps the message of color contrast is most frequently relayed in the costume with a jacket of an entirely different color.

This vogue is smartly expressed in terms of plaid for the shirt topped with a jacket in solid tone, either black, navy, red, dark green or brown. Quite unusual, brown for spring, but Paris designers are exploiting it.

TRAPPING PHEASANTS

William Wood, who lives near Woden has trapped and shipped 500 pheasants this winter. The birds are caught at night with an auto and a net and shipped to the state farm at Clive, Iowa, from where they are sent to other points in the state for release or sold to other states. His nightly catches varied from four to ninety-eight. The state pays one dollar for each bird which is received at the state farm. Several parties in this county have also been catching the birds.—Forest City Summit

FARMERS ARE INTERESTED IN BUILDING SOIL FERTILITY

More Hancock County Farmers Are Growing Alfalfa Every Year

Each year finds more and more farmers interested in building up their soil fertility and interested in growing alfalfa. Another carload of limestone has arrived at Garner which means that Albert Borchers, Henry Schrader and L. L. Gilbert are going to arrange for the growing of alfalfa. They are not going to throw away high priced seed but instead are spending what would have been wasted money on limestone.

When we know that a good Iowa corn crop removes from the soil about $65,000,000 worth of nitrogen $10,000,000 worth of phosphorus and $5,000,000 worth of potash on the basis of wholesale fertilizer prices. Of this, $80,000,000 worth of plant food in the corn crop, about $16,000,000 leaves the farm in form of grain. Fertility sold in livestock and careless handling of manures accounts for estimated additional losses of $25,000,000 of plant food thru a single corn crop.

A total of $40,000,000 represents the estimated value of the three plant foods—nitrogen, phosphorus and potassium—lost from the farms of the state in one corn crop. Is it any wonder that we must turn our attention to the upbuilding of our soils?

Many farmers have been inquiring as to the value of hulled oats and whether it pays to get the oats hulled. Hulled oats is not excelled as a food, especially for hogs but whether it pays to have it hulled depends on the price of oats and the price of livtstock it is fed to. The practical way to feed oats to pigs is whole, however, if you can get them hulled for four cents I say hull them.

Do not grind oats. Preparing oats does not pay. The pigs will eat more but will not pay as much for it. When you feed ground oats the pigs will eat more which means more hulls forced through their digestive system. Oat hulls are crude fiber and of no feed value and often they cause digestive disorders in pigs. Self feed whole oats and better results will be obtained than thru grinding.

Then, too many farmers are inquiring as to the value of skimmilk as a feed. One hundred pounds of skim milk is worth seven pounds of corn and seven pounds of tankage or in other words about twenty-eight cents per one hundred pounds Semi-solid buttermilk is worth around $1.75 per cwt. One gallon of skim-milk in eight gallons of water is equal in feeding value to one gallon of semi-solid in forty gallons of water. Five hundred pounds of skim milk is equal to one hundred pounds of semi-solid. In other words be careful of what you pay for your semi-solid buttermilk.

Soy beaus should not be fed except in very small quantities to your pig crop until the pigs weigh fifty or sixty pounds. After that soybeans can be fed more freely but preferably with tankage or oilmeal or any good protein supplement. Soybeans alone as the protein supplement will cause soft pork which is criticised by the packers however every farmer can afford to raise a few acres of soybeans either for hay or for beans to take the place of a high protein supplement that cost $35 to $50 or higher per ton.

THREE KLEMME GIRLS INJURED IN AUTO WRECK

Accident Happened One Mile North Of Klemme Wednesday Night

Three Klemme girls, Jane Dutheridge who was driving her model A. Ford roadster ..Reva Elder and Clarice Wellemeyer were all injured in an auto accident last Wednesday evening as they were returning to Klemme after having attended a show at Garner. Miss Elder was the most seriously injured and she is still confined to her bed at this writing. She received severe cuts on her face and forehead. Miss Duthridge received a deep cut on one leg, and Miss Wellemeyer escaped with but minor cuts but was quite badly bruised about the face. They were given attention at a local doctor's office shortly after the accident, as they were brought to town by Clyde Marshall who happened to be near when the accident occured as he was on his way home.

As near as we can learn the girls in the model A. Ford roadster were driving south when they crashed into the rear end of H. H. Thieman's Model T. touring car, which was also going south and was driven by Edwin Thieman, who was accompanied by several other young people who had also been at the show.

The front end of the Dutheridge car was demolished and the radiator was shoved back to within a few inches of the cowl. Miss Elder was injured when she was thrown thru the windshield. The back end of the Thieman car was smashed in and the back seat was pushed ahead nearly up to the front seat and the frame was sprung. None of the occupants of the Theiman car were injured.

Soviet Premier Attacks the United States and Secretary of State Stimson Begins Study of the Russian Question.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

V. Molotov

MUCH attention is being paid these days to our relations with Russia, or the lack of them. In Moscow the opening session of the All-Union Soviet congress was aroused to wild enthusiasm by a violent attack on the United States—and incidentally all other "capitalistic" countries—delivered by Viacheslav Molotov, president of the council of people's commissars, which means premier of the Soviet government.

Molotov characterized the lack of diplomatic relations with the United States as abnormal and as being part of a plot of European groups, headed by the Vatican, against Soviet Russia. He said that twenty countries are having satisfactory relations, except Poland, whose relations might be improved.

He denounced the charges of dumping and forced labor that have been made against the Soviet government, and declared the American "foolish Fish bill"—framed by Representative Hamilton Fish, Jr., after a congressional investigation into Communist activties—undoubtedly would affect trade relations between the two countries.

"America must remember," he declared, "that the imports of the Union of the Socialist Soviet Republics depend upon her exports."

The premier called the attention of the delegates to a statement by an American senator that "a thousand persons are starving to death daily in the United States." He asked the delegates to compare this situation to that in the U. S. S. R. where, he said, there was no unemployment and no starvation.

In Washington it was learned that Secretary of State Henry Stimson is now devoting most of his time to a careful study of the Russian question in all its phases, presumably at the request of President Hoover. That this indicated any important change of policy by the administration was considered unlikely by the well informed. Indeed, William R. Castle, act ; secretary in the absence of Mr. Stimson, said that the latter's study had no significance beyond the fact that the secretary desired to inform himself more closely on the Soviet problem. Since becoming secretary, Mr. Castle pointed out, Mr. Stimson has been devoting his time to disarmament, Latin-American affairs, and other problems, leaving no time to study Russia.

From the statements of state department officials it was gathered that no consideration would be given to the suggestion that a separate division for Russia be established in the state department, and that there was nothing in the report that an assistant secretary of state would be appointed to handle Russian affairs. President Hoover has in the past stood firmly by the policy that there can be no recognition of Russia before the Soviet government agrees to recognize official and private obligations to this country and cease propaganda intended to overthrow the American government.

T. C. T. Crain

DISTRICT ATTORney Thomas C. T. Crain of New York county is liable to lose his job as a result of the exposures of corruption in the magistrates' courts of the metropolis. The City club through its officers filed formal charges against Crain, alleging inefficiency, incompetency and misfeasance in office, and asked that Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt remove him. The governor promptly appointed Samuel Seabury as special commissioner to investigate the charges and report back to him. If he sees fit the governor may remove Crain and name a successor to serve the remainder of the year. Seabury already has been serving as special referee investigating the magistrates' courts and will continue that work. It is expected that the Crain inquiry will lead into the police department and any other department of the city government or phase of political life which may be related to the district attorney's conduct of his office.

Republican leaders and others are urging that the legislature authorize a thorough nonpartisan investigation of the entire New York city government, and a mass meeting of citizens was called to promote that plan.

IT IS understood now that the new naval treaty between France and Italy will be signed by only those nations and Great Britain. It will not be incorporated in the London naval treaty of 1930, but both pacts will run concurrently until 1936. Official expressions of approval of the convention will be asked of both the United States und Japan, but neither will be called on to sign it, because it was recognized that this might embarrass them owing to the high submarine tonnage which the pact allots to France.

The London treaty as ratified by the American senate provides for 52,000 tons of submarines for the United States and Great Britain. The Franco-Italian-British agreement provides for 81,000 tons of submarines for the French navy. If this figure were to be inserted in the London treaty it is possible the higher tonnage would be questioned by the senate and the whole treaty would need the senate's consent again. This the administration desired to avoid. The same parliamentary reason applies to the case of Japan.

Arthur Henderson, British foreign secretary, made public the terms of the three-power accord in a long memorandum. They cover three outstanding considerations in the armaments situation. Technical problems of European naval power are swept away; renewal of an armaments race such as led to the World war has, it is hoped, been prevented; success of the world disarmament conference at Geneva next year is brought measurably closer.

The basis of the agreement as outlined is the detailing of the limits of both the French and Italian building programs in all fleet categories until 1936. It is estimated by naval experts that France will continue to hold a superiority of about 157,000 tons over the Italian fleet, although this is not stated explicitly in the memorandum.

ONE of the State department's most valuable men, Undersecretary Joseph Potter Cotton, died in Baltimore after a long illness and two severe operations for spinal infection. Mr. Cotton, who was fifty-five years old and a native of Rhode Island, worked under President Hoover when the latter was food administrator and later secretary of commerce. He was appointed to the state department post in 1929 and made a reputation for his frank and direct diplomatic methods.

Justice Holmes

OLIVER WENdell Holmes, the grand old man of the Supreme court of the United States, celebrated his ninetieth birthday on Sunday, and received at his home the affectionate congratulations of countless friends and admirers. In the evening the venerable associate justice made his first radio speech, after listening to the tributes of Chief Justice Hughes and others. Justice Holmes said, through the microphone:

"In this symposium my part is only to sit in silence. To express one's feelings as the end draws near is too intimate a task.

"But I may mention one thought that comes to me as a listener in," he added. "The riders in a race do not stop short when they reach the goal. There is a little finishing canter before coming to a standstill. There is time to hear the kind voices of friends and to say to one's self: 'The work is done.' But just as one says that the answer comes: 'The race is over, but the work never is done while the power to work remains.' The canter that brings you to a standstill need not be only coming to rest. It cannot be, while you still live. For to live is to function. That is all there is to living."

Next day Justice Holmes achieved his ambition of handing down a decision after he was ninety. In it the Supreme court ruled that within the meaning of the motor vehicle theft act an airplane is not a motor vehicle.

STEALING a march on the insurgent Republicans and Democrats, the Republican national committee announced the organization of an advisory council for agriculture, with Senator-Elect L. J. Dickinson of Iowa as its chairman. The other members are Senator Arthur Capper of Kansas and Representatives Robert G. Simmons of Nebraska and Fred S. Purnell of Indiana. This council will have headquarters in Washington and in the West, and will immediately begin work in the corn and wheat belts. One of its purposes, it was stated, is to be the "dissemination of accurate information regarding the various constructive steps the administration has taken to aid the farmers and to save them from bankruptcy in this critical period of economic depression and drought."

Two days after this announcement was made, the insurgents opened their scheduled conference the purpose of which was to demonstrate that the Hoover administration did little if anything to relieve the economic depression in the country. Five sessions were held, each devoted to discussion of a major topic. Seantor Borah, who still advocates the export debenture, presided over the session on farm relief: Senator Norris, chairman of the conference, presided over the public utilities session; Senator Cutting over the representative government session, and Senator-Elect Costigan of Colorado over that devoted to the tariff. All of these except Costigan are nominally Republicans.

ONE more campaign issue was provided for the Democrats when President Hoover vetoed the Wagner bill for a reorganized employment service. Even if the measure is again introduced and passed by the next congress, the Democrats are sure to make the veto one of their principal talking points, claiming the bill should have been enacted and signed at the height of the business depression.

Empress Nagako

EMPRESS NAGako of Japan has given birth to a daughter, her fourth, and the imperial family and the Japanese nation are rejoicing and celebrating. But the joy is mainly over the safety of the new princess and her mother, and there is little concealment of the disappointment that the child is not a son. The throne of Japan can pass only to male descendants of the sun goddess and Emperor Hirohito is yet without a direct heir to carry on the line that has been unbroken for many centuries. Prince Chichibu, the emperor's next younger brother, continues to be the heir presumptive.

REAR ADMIRAL SAMUEL McGowan, retired, appearing before the war policies commission that is now conducting hearings, advocated the adoption of a constitutional amendment to prevent the country from going to war without a referendum of its citizens. He added the amendment also should provide that if the referendum resulted in war every able bodied male citizen between the ages of eighteen and thirty-five be drafted. He advocated prohibiting any increases in wages during war also.

Chairman Johnson of the house veterans' committee and General Delafield, former chairman of the war department board of contract adjustments, opposed the referendum plan as impracticable and unnecessary.

Bernard M. Baruch, who was chairman of the war industries board during the World war, proposed that, to prevent profiteering during a war, all prices should be fixed by Presidential proclamation at the prewar level.

SCORES of towns and villages in the Balkans, in Jugoslavia, Bulgaria and Greece, have been wrecked by earthquake shocks, and the dead, though officially put at 150, probably numbered nearer 1,000. The temblors continued for several days. King Alexander of Jugoslavia and King Boris of Bulgaria both left their capitals and personally directed the relief work in the stricken districts, which was carried on effectively by the Red Cross.

Terrific gales, accompanied by snow and extreme cold, swept over most of Europe during the week, and flooded rivers, blocked highways and delayed trains added to the distress. The island of Mauritius was devastated by a hurricane that killed a number of persons and left 10,000 homeless. Northwestern Japan had an earthquake that destroyed many houses.

PERU'S new provisional president is Lieut. Col. David Samanez Ocampo, and he has assumed the office in Lima after flying there from Arequipa. Ocampo was the head of the "southern junta" which was set up by Arequipa revolutionaries. He and his followers, to bring peace to the country, gave up their regime in favor of the new junta at the capital, and Ocampo was promptly put at the head of the government.

W. H. Wattis

SECRETARY of the Interior has accepted the bid of the Six Companies, Inc., of San Francisco, which offered to build the Hoover dam, power house and appurtenant works at the Boulder canyon project for $48,890,095. This huge engineering job, the biggest ever undertaken in the United States, will be directed for the present from a hospital in San Francisco, for William H. Wattis, president of the Six Companies, is confined in the institution.

The entire project, including erection of a dam and power house, installation of machinery and building of a canal, is estimated to cost the tremendous total of $165,000,000. Congress has already authorized expenditure of $108,000,000 for the dam and appurtenant work.

NAVY department officials announce that contracts for the construction of at least six of the eleven destroyers appropriated for during the short session of congress will be awarded early this summer. The designs for the new destroyers call for the largest, most heavily armed, fastest and most seaworthy vessels of this class ever built for the United States fleet. They will have a speed of 40 miles an hour, weigh 1,500 tons each, carry 5-inch guns and, in addition, have a large fuel carrying capacity to provide a larger radius of action.

Lesson for March 29

REVIEW: JESUS THE WORLD'S SAVIOR

GOLDEN TEXT—How God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power: who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil; for God was with him.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Busy Doing Good.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Busy Doing Good.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Jesus the World's Savior: Preparation and Popularity.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Jesus the World's Savior: Preparation and Popularity.

Since the lessons of the quarter center in one person and have one theme; namely, the world's Savior, the best method of review for senior and adult classes will be to refresh the mind with the principal facts and leading teachings of each lesson. Assignments should be made a week ahead. The following suggestions are offered:

Lesson for January 4.

John the Baptist was a great preacher. He had a great heritage in his godly parents. Much can be expected from a son of such parents.

Lesson for January 11.

Jesus, as to personality, was divine and yet his human nature developed in the normal way. He waxed strong in body, was filled with wisdom, and God's grace was upon him. Though conscious of his deity, he lived a life of filial obedience.

Lesson for January 18.

John the Baptist came in fulfillment of prophecy, calling upon men to prepare for the coming of the Messiah by repenting of their sins. Baptism was the appointed sign of their repentance. With fine humility, John turned the attention of the people from himself to Christ.

Lesson for January 25.

Jesus was led into the wilderness by the Holy Spirit to be tempted of the Devil. His temptation was Messianic. The purpose was to demonstrate the reality of the incarnation. Jesus went from the place of anointing and heavenly recognition as the Son of God to meet and to spoil the enemy of God and man (Heb. 2:14).

Lesson for February 1.

Jesus demonstrated his power over various diseases and over demons, thus displaying his Lordship. Even while demonstrating his mighty power, he operated through benevolent channels.

Lesson for February 8.

Jesus made clear to the disciples that they would be hated and opposed as they went out into the world with his message. Those who follow Christ must expect opposition and suffering.

Lesson for February 15.

Jesus is the friend of sinners. There is no one so steeped in sin as to be shut out from him. Christ came into the world "to seek and to save that which was lost."

Lesson for February 22.

Jesus' supreme mission was to make known the good news of salvation to a lost world. In spite of the good seed sown by him, only a small portion brought forth full fruitage owing to the unfavorable condition of the soil.

Lesson for March 1.

The greatness of the harvest—man's lost condition moved Jesus to ask the disciples to pray the Lord to thrust out laborers. The real force back of missionary endeavor is prayer. When the church begins to pray about missions, there will be missionaries and money to sustain them.

Lesson for March 8.

The parable of the Good Samaritan shows who is my neighbor and what being a neighbor means. My neighbor is the man needing my help, whether next door or across the world. Being a neighbor is the most important thing for me. To be a neighbor means to be on the lookout for those in need and to give sympathetically the needed help.

Lesson for March 15.

The Bethany home was always open to the Lord. Jesus will come into such homes as will give him welcome. The inspiration of the Bethany home must have greatly helped Jesus as he went out to meet his foes. It is the inspiration of the home which gives men courage to go out and fight the battles of life.

Lesson for March 22.

The parable of the rich fool shows the peril of allowing the heart to be set upon even the fruits of legitimate toil. To seek gold and thus forget God is to play the fool.

The next quarter continues the lessons from the gospel by Luke.

Our Love to God

Our love to God brings us a gleam in earth's darkness to show us whither we are going. It keeps us in sympathy with God's work everywhere. It is our enlistment in the army of good will toward men.—Isaac Edwardson.

Men of Genius

Men of genius are often dull and inert in society, as a blazing meteor when it descends to earth, is only a stone.—Longfellow.

Always Appreciated

CHILDREN are delighted with the fine chocolate flavor of Monarch Cocoa, the inviting aroma, and attractive color. It is a most welcome drink on a cold day.

Monarch Cocoa is so rich and smooth that it makes fudge of unusual goodness, and it has no superior for baking, cooking and dessert-making.

This is one of more than 250 Monarch Super-Quality Foods sold and recommended by 50,000 independent retailers.

Civil War Memory

The sale of the Jack Paul grocery store at Mexico, Mo., reminded J. W. Coakley, eighty-five-year-old Confederate veteran, that he had transacted business with four generations of the Paul family, three in Missouri and one in Virginia. He recalled that in 1862 after the Yankees had captured the salt mines near his home, and the price of salt had soared, he rode horseback for six miles to the Paul store at Harrisonburg, paying $1 for four pounds of coarse barrel salt.—Indianapolis News.

MOTHERS ARE LEARNING USES OF MAGNESIA

From the beginning of expectancy until baby is weaned, Phillips' Milk of Magnesia performs the greatest service for many women.

It relieves nausea, heartburn, "morning sickness," inclination to vomit; helps digestion. Its mild laxative action assures regular bowel movement.

Phillips' Milk of Magnesia is better than lime water for neutralizing cow's milk for infant feeding.

All drugstores have Phillips' Milk of Magnesia in generous 25c and 50c bottles. Always insist on the genuine, endorsed by physicians for 50 years.

Keeping It Going

"I want to see the boss."

"What do you want to see him about?"

"About a job."

"I'm sorry, but you can't see him; he's in an unemployment conference."—Judge.

Rainbow Rooms

"In your opinion what is the most colorful profession?"

"Bathroom designing."

WHITE SATIN UNITES WITH BLACK FOR FORMAL GOWNS

Superbly Styled Evening Gown.

PERHAPS the most significant gesture of the mode at the present moment is that which has to do with featuring startling contrast. No matter from what angle the theme is approached, whether it be from a color standpoint, or a matter of combining different weaves, the style program whether for day or evening places the accent on contrast.

The superbly styled satin evening gown in the picture interprets the trend to striking contrast at its best. Katya Sorina, the young Russian dancer who has been signed up to appear in radio pictures, wears this dress to perfection. The haute couture of Paris continues to do wonderful things with satin in the evening mode; the latest movement being to contrast black and white as instanced in the handsome gown portrayed.

The dress with a light top, whether it be formal or informal, offers infinite opportunity for putting the law of contrast into practice. The afternoon black or navy frock with an almost waist-deep lace yoke is the darling of present day fashion. The finer and more exquisite the lace, the better, alencon being the favorite. For evening lace in two colors gives a new and enchanting aspect to the contrast theme. A ruby-colored lace frock, per example, has a pale pink yoke, or a frock of black lace is topped with flesh-colored lace.

Another channel of expression for contrast effects is the jacket costume, which may be as formal or informal as occasion demands. For evening it is ultra smart to wear a little jacket which contrasts the dress. The bolero or hip-length jacket of velvet, either in black or a delectable bright hue, is especially highlighted in the mode. Very new and very lovely is the little lace jacket which contrasts its color to the frock over which it is posed.

In the sports realm this contrasting of jacket and skirt or jacket and one-piece dress, is done to a finish. Plaids and stripes with plain compete with bi-color and tri-color combinations.

New Spring Coats.

From the standpoint of artful self-fabric manipulation, this season's coats are perfectly thrilling. You may not have felt the need of a new coat this spring, but when you see the smart models of stunning woolens which have lately arrived with their "tricky" scarf collars and big lapels, their wide belts and their rows of buttons, not to mention a score of other intriguing details, well, women have been known to change their minds about some things—even the immediate need of a new coat.

Perhaps the first thing which impresses one at sight of the new unfurred coats is the swank of the materials of which they are made. They are for the most part soft woolens of spongy porous weave, such as you know without being told will not wrinkle and will stand the test of travel and weather to your utmost satisfaction.

The loose basket weaves are wonderfully good looking. Competing with them are tweedlike effects which are made interesting with nubbings in white or colors, and some of the smartest tweeds have colorful interwoven borders.

These stunning woolens are proving an impetus to designers to make a feature of fabric manipulation. In consequence, the coat models which are really new abound in styling details of the cleverest sort. Interest centers especially about unusual neck lines which are part collar and part scarf, being a two-in-one proposition, so to speak. It adds zest to the mode that these arrangements are adjustable—supposed to be worn most anyway that is becoming.

One of the smart coats shown for spring wear is this jaunty model in the picture. It is of checked material in varying shades of brown. It is distinguished by a very new and ingenious self-fabric scarf neckline. It is belted smartly; flaunts a novel cuff on the sleeve, boasts a single large square rever, and is in fact an exponent of ultra-modish fashioning.

FARM POULTRY

PURE BRED HENS ARE PROFITABLE

Cost a Little More but Pay It All Back in Eggs.

April is a good time to make every effort possible to produce pure bred poultry instead of mongrels. If flocks of hens are kept on our farms that possess the colors of Joseph's coat, combined with numerous sizes and shapes, and producing a product that would take an expert to tell the shades and texture of the shell, then poultry profits will be slim. With small profits, our interest will lessen, and it takes interest to make us go after poultry in the right way, in the opinion of D. H. Hall, extension poultry husbandman, Clemson college, South Carolina.

"Have you ever seen a farmer that was interested in a mongrel flock of chickens? If you have, you have seen more than I have," says Mr. Hall. "As a rule, when the farm flock are mongrels, the farmer himself will always tell you that they belong to the wife, but when pure bred poultry comes on the farm, then this same farmer doesn't mind showing the visitors the poultry, and most of the time, will claim every one of them.

"Pure bred poultry will also attract attention to the farm. I do not care how humble the home may be or how poor the farmer is himself, people will always stop to look at a flock of pure bred chickens. When other people are interested in the things you have, there is usually a sale for them at a good profit.

"What about the cost? Pure bred chickens may cost a little more, but they will pay back in eggs and meat more than mongrels ever can. The pure bred poultry producers in each county should get behind this movement and plan pure bred poultry on each farm."

Right Number of Males Required in Hen Flock

There is no absolute rule in regard to the number of males needed in a flock, but there are some general recommendations that will prove helpful in deciding this question. For the Asiatic breeds one rooster is needed for six or eight hens. These birds are slower moving than the American breeds. The American breeds, such as Plymouth Rocks, Rhode Island Reds and Wyandottes, need one rooster for every ten or twelve hens. With Leghorns and other Mediterranean breeds one rooster to fifteen or twenty hens is usually satisfactory.

The activity of the males will make some difference in regard to the number needed. In comparatively large flocks fewer males will be needed than where the rooster and hens are closely confined. It is better to have a few more males at the beginning of the season than is needed so that there will be sufficient even though some of them may become disabled or die. If new males are added later in the season they will usually start fighting and do more harm than good. A few extra roosters early in the season is a more practical method of meeting the situation.

Increasing Demand for Capons of Good Quality

There is a steadily increasing demand for capons as the market becomes appreciative of their superior quality for table purposes.

The question is sometimes asked: "What is a capon?" The answer is: "An unsexed cockerel"—or a bird from which the reproductive organs have been removed before it has been fully developed or attains maturity.

This operation has the effect of causing a more placid temperament to develop in the bird, and the fighting instinct is lost as the result of the continuance of the infantile, undeveloped sexual nature. After the operation has been performed these birds grow rapidly; and their flesh retains the tender condition of young chickens up to the time when they are fully grown.

Egg Hatchability

Birds which have been producing large numbers of eggs throughout the winter are usually found to produce eggs late in the season with a lower fertility and hatchability. The explanation of this is that the vitality of the birds has gone into egg production. The hatchability of these eggs can be improved, however, by giving the flock all the direct sunlight they can get during the winter. Cod liver oil is also of some value, as are the good glass substitutes.

Mating Geese

The best results with the heavy breds of geese come from mating in trios or using not more than three geese with each gander. On duck farms, a mating of seven ducks to one drake usually gives good results. Ganders are usually larger and coarser than geese with larger heads and thicker necks and they have a more shrill call. The cry of the goose is rather harsh. The only sure way to determine the sex will be an examination of the organs.

For COLDS

We all catch colds and they can make us miserable; but yours needn't last long if you will do this: Take two or three tablets of Bayer Aspirin just as soon as possible after a cold starts. Stay in the house if you can—keep warm. Repeat with another tablet or two of Bayer Aspirin every three or four hours, if those symptoms of cold persist. Take a good laxative when you retire, and keep bowels open. If throat is sore, dissolve three tablets in a quarter-glassful of water and gargle. This soothes inflammation and reduces infection. There is nothing like Bayer Aspirin for a cold, or sore throat. And it relieves aches and pains almost instantly. The genuine tablets, marked Bayer, are absolutely harmless to the heart.

Tree Had Sealed Pipe

When A. R. Sullivan, of Tacoma, picked up a piece of wood to throw into his stove, close examination disclosed that an old pipe had been sealed in the heart of a tree, and that 80 rings had ground around it. William Bonney, curator of the Washington State Historical society, declared that the pipe had probably been placed in a hole in a fir tree nearly 100 years ago by some trapper or hunter.

THE PUBLIC IS PAYING THE BILL

Iowa has just reason to be proud of her good roads.

But no one realized that in voting these bonds and building these splendid highways we were creating a new, and possibly an even more serious problem for ourselves.

Now everyone is asking—What are we to do to regulate and handle the armies of giant buses., trucks, and commercial carriers which seem to have flocked into the state almost overnight—making free use of the roads which we have built at such expense?.

We built these roads to make it easier for the public to travel from place to place. But the ordinary passenger car starting out for a trip from one town to another, is crowded into the ditch, threatened with demolition at intersections, and generally mistreated by these oversize trucks which come thundering down the road at almost any speed. We thought that the good roads would make it easier for he farmer to haul his products to market—but our farmers have learned by bitter experience that it is a narrow squeak to stay on the paving every-time they meet one of these big, oversize commercial carriers.

The question now is—What can we do to safeguard these roads for the purposes for which they were originally built? First, there should be definite legislation restricting the ength and wdth of commercial carriers to reasonable aind safe dimensions. There should be some patrol system which will compel them to obey the law and respect the public's rights, instead of pound ing down the center of the highway as they so often do.

And even more important to the taxpayer, is the financial side of the issue. We know of no other business that expects the public to bear the expense of making that business possible. That is just what these buses and trucks are doing. They are using the good roads which the taxpayers have built—and are paying virtually nothing for the priviledge. We should make them take up their share of the cost of both building and maintaining the highways over which they ply. Otherwise, the public a few years from now will be left holding the sack, with a ot of battered. broken-down roads, and no funds with which to repair them.

TOO MANY KAISER PICTURES IN GLOBE - GAZETTE

(From "The Editor's Mail Bag", In Mason City Globe-Gazette)

MELTONVILLE, March 3.—I see in today's paper another picture of the kaiser. This is the third picture within the last few weeks. Being the mother of a soldier, who a few years ago, was taken across the seas against his will, to offer his life to keep this same kaiser and his armies from invading our country, I do not like to spend money for a paper that flaunts his picture, usually on the front page.

Our own country has many good men who have sacrificed their lives to keep him at bay. Why not print some of their pictures? My boy, fortunately came home strong and well, but what of Merle Hay and scores of others What of our neighbor boy who had his jaw all shot to pieces?

I am glad God has given him time to repent of his misdeeds but instead of being glad that he has 73 birthdays—this country would have been far better off if he hadn't even had one.

Money is scarce and hard to get these days and if you have any more pictures of the kaiser on hand, please refund my money and stop my paper before you print them.

Yours,
ROSIE B. DOCKUM,
Meltonville, Iowa.

TRUCK REGULATION

Perhaps we should have foreseen it, but probably no one thought of the trmendous wear and tear that would be placed upon our costly roads by commercial carriers, when we labored so diligently to put through the good roads program. There was much talk of the value these roads would be to farmers desiring to reach markets in all seaons, of their convenience to travelers, pleasure seekers and business men deiring to get hither and yon over the tate in their automobiles. Bu did anyone dream of the huge freight cars, motorized, or the tractors pulling actual trains of trailers, that frequently monopolize stretches of our hard fought for hard roads?

Some day, perhaps it will be necessary to build parallel roads for bus and truck traffic, paid for out of special fees levied against these carriers. But that time is not at hand. Just now the General Assembyl is faced with the problem of regulation and it must do a thorough job of it to protect our roads and preserve them for the uses originally intended. It can do this only through a drastic limitation upon the length, width and weight of the trucks and strict rules governing heir right of way to lighter vehicles and by providing state police to see that truck drivers obey these regulations. We are also inclined to oppose the giving of exclusive or perpetual franchises to any commercial lines over sections of the public highways.— Burlington Hawkeye.

ROADS ESSENTIAL TO SUCCESSFUL FARMING

"In general, more attention has been given to the improvement of State highways during the past ten years than to country roads," says Harry Tucker, Proffessor of Highway engineering at North Carolina State College. "The result is that the farmers in many communities are unable to take full benefit of the improved roads through difficulty in getting to them. They are now demanding roads that will be passable for motor vehicles during all seasons of the year—and rightly so—for the success of the modern farmer is dependent upon diversification of his farm products and the means of getting them easily and quickly to a market."

It is an ill wind that blows no one good, and the unemployment problem has done much to advance the farm road movement.

To assure the greatest value from the use of road funds a fair relation between main and secondary roads must be maintained. Main highways no matter how straight and smooth, are valuless to a farmer who lives five miles away from them on a road that becomes a series of mud holes in winter. There is much talk nowadays about a new agricultural era—and good farm to market roads must be built if that hope ever is to be an actuality.

HORSES GIVE CHEAP POWER NOW

Iowa farmers are not using to the best advantage their investment of $74,885.000 in 1,088,000 head of horses and mules, according to R. K. Bliss, director if the Extension Service, Iowa State College.

With corn, oats ,hay and horses relatively low in price probably there has been no time in the past 25 years when horses could be used at such a low cost as now.

The farmer who wishes to utilize his investment in horses to the best advantage, secure low power costs and cut operating expenses, may do so now by using the multiple hitch.

By use of the multiple hitch one man can readily drive six or eight horses, or even more if he has them Instead of plowing three or four acres a day as was the case with a four-horse team, he can plow sixor eight acres or more a day with the modern hitch and do other work with relative speed.

Information as to how to make these hitches can be procured from the county agent, from the State Horse and Mule Association. Department of Agriculture ,Des Moines, or from the Extension Service at Ames

VEGETABLES ARE GOOD TONIC

Green Leafy Ones, Tomatoes Recommended For Spring Fever

A good preventative for "spring fever", that lazy feeling which lowers an individual's efficiency and desire to work when warm spring days come, is found in leafy vegetables and canned tomatoes, acording to Miss Ruth Cessna, food specialist in the Extension Service at Iowa State College.

If leafy vegetables are green and are served raw they are one of the best sources of vitamins and minerals. In addition, they furnish roughage. Even when cooked and served with their own juices they are still above other vegetables in food value. A leafy vegetable is good health insurance.

Cabbage, lettuce and spinach are three leafy vegetables which are available at reasonable prices. Cabbage may be served raw as in cold slaw with a sour cream dressing which is whipped stiff, as a part of a boiled dinner, or as scalloped cabbage with a cream sauce.

Spinach, which has a high iron content, can be served by running thru a food chopper and using it in a vegetable custard or molded in lemon jello and served with mayonnaise or cooked for a few minutes and served with melted butter and a little lemon juice. Over-cooking often gives spinach an undesirable flavor associated with it by many people.

WHERE DO ALL THE BEST EGGS GO?

"Where do all the best eggs go?" is the question being asked of the Iowa Department of Agriculture by many city consumers who remember the fine, large, fresh eggs produced on the farms of their friends.

The answer, according to Carl N. Kennedy. Assistant Secreatry of Agriculture, is that many of the eggs are sorted and the best eggs shipped to the eastern markets where they will bring more money In other words, the home market is being supplied with the poorer grades.

"This condition," stated Mr. Kennedy," is brought about by competetive prices for eggs, without competetive standards or grades by which consumers may ask for the quality of eggs which they desire. That is the reson the department is endorsing a law establishing retail grade of eggs, as such official grade would make it possible to merchandise good quality eggs at good prices, or cheap eggs at cheap prices."

"The other day inspectors of the department went to twenty retail stores and purchased eggs. Out of the 240 eggs from twenty different sources, they found just 4 eggs that would class as Henneries, or the top grade. Extras, the second grade, which are also very high class eggs fared somewhat better, there being 65 eggs of this grade. Standards, the lower grade, received 160 eggs. Many eggs of good quality but small were found in this latter grade which could have been graded as Pullet Extras, meaning a good quality, but small egg. Eight eggs that were inedible and three storage eggs that were shipped in among the fresh eggs, made up the total.

"There is no excuse for the bad eggs and grocers can partly overcome the low quality by voluntarily offering eggs of different grades to their purcasers," asserts Mr. Kennedy. "However the biggest difficulty is that there are no official grades which would prevent competitors from claiming a similar grade even though eggs of a poorer quality were substituted."

The Federated Womens Clubs of the state have recently joined with other producer and consumer organizations in endorsing the passage of the bill establishing retail grades of eggs.

Bennie Swalve wanted to know what a country school was like, so Friday morning he accompanied Miss Edith Haupt to her school south west of Klemme and spent the day visiting. He said that Miss Haupt had a very fine school. Bennie then spent Saturday at the John Swalve farm.

We wish to again warn children about running from out between parked cars onto the street. We saw two small boys Saturday night run out onto the street from between cars and were nearly struck by an auto. The fact that the driver of the car was going only about 10 miles per hour and had good working brakes, saved the children from possible serious injury. Drivers, watch the children and go slow past parked cars. Parents, warn your children of this danger.

IOWA OBJECTS TO YELLOW OLEOMARGARINE

The old fight of the butter industry against substitutes broke out again when the federal bureau of internal revenue ruled that oleo margarine. which is yellow in color on account of the use of palm oil in its manufacture, did not need to pay the special 10 cent tax on the colored product.

"This type of oleomargarine will not be allowed to be sold in Iowa in spite of the federal ruling," stated M G. Thornburg ,Secretary of Agriculture. "Our dairy and food laws are more stringent than the federal laws. They do not permit the sale of colored oleo margarine regardless of whether the oleomargarine is colored by oils used in the manufactur of the product, or by some specific coloring."

The Iowa law refered to by Mr. Thornburg states as follows: "No imitation butter or imitation cheese shall be colored with any substance aud no such imitation product shall be made by mixing animal fats, vegetable oils, or other substances, for the purpose or with the effect of importing to the mixture the color of yllow butter or cheese."

"Iowa dairymen will undoubtedly insist on federal legislation which will be the equal of or even more stringent, than that in Iowa. Iowa creameries prodduce over ,200.000,000, pounds of creamery butter annually, the sale of which will be seriously affected if colored oleomarganine is alowed to go on the market without paying the special tax," declared Mr. Thornburg.

MANURE BIG HELP IN 1930

Gave Soils Organic Matter Which Aided in Holding Moisture

The part that organic matter played in increasing the water-holding capacity of the soil was the most outstanding observation during 193 in the cooperative field experiments conducted thruout Iowa, reports H. R. Meldrum, assistant in field experiments at Iowa State College. The livestock system of farming proved superior the past year in most experiments because manure played an important part in building up the organic matter content of the soil, which aided soils to retain larger amounts of moisture. This resulted in increased corn yields. In most cases less damage from firing of corn was evident on the land which had been manured than on that getting crop residues as the source of organic matter

Fertilizers such as rock phosphate, superphosphate and complete commercial fertilizer showed little or no effect on the corn crop the past year except in northeastern Iowa or in small sections where the rainfall was about normal.

In several cases the corn crop actually showed a harmful effect from the use of these fertilizers. Meldum says this condition was undoubtedly due to the fact that the fertilizers increased leaf and stem development and advanced growth to a stage where the dry weather and, especially the hot winds had a serious effect. Corn tassels and top leaves were burned white and the silk dried up. checking fertilization and the growth of the plant.

MOTORS COST FARMS THREE DOLLARS PER ACRE

The cost of operating the 217.129 automobiles, 55,065 tractors and 26,473 trucks on the 208,506 Iowa farms, represents an overhead cost of approximately three dollars per acre, according to Carl N. Kennedy, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture.

"This means that there is slightly over one automobile, one fourth of a tractor and one eighth of a truck for every Iowa farm of 163.6 acres," stater Mr. Kennedy. "A conservative estimate of the cost of aperating this equipment would be approximately $500 per farm or slightly over $3 per acre. This over head cost is difficult to absorb with present low prices of farm products and is one of the reasons for the closer study of horses and mules for farm power purposes."

Kindness Wins Nurse Deserved Fortune

Providence, R. I.—The will of the late Mrs. Josephine Orom Peirce of Cranston stands. Miss Mary Adamson, trained nurse who cared for Mrs. Peirce during her last years, will receive nearly $40,000.

The nurse was given a $20,000 legacy and named as residuary legatee.

Curtis Eames Hill, investment banker of this city and a cousin of Mrs. Peirce, contested the will on the ground that Mrs. Peirce, because of her physical condition, was not competent to execute the will which was dated November 5, three days before her death.

The case was tried before a jury last May, but the jury failed to agree. It was to have been tried again, but a settlement was reached on the eve of the trial.

The trial before Judge O'Connell in Superior court created interest because of the character of the witnesses on both sides.

Court attaches asserted that all the witnesses were "remarkably truthful and that no attempt was made to bolster either side through the aid of truth stretching."

Miss Adamson, it developed, was given the legacy because of her kindness to Mrs. Peirce.

Mrs. Peirce and her husband, who died several years ago, were New Yorkers and came to Cranston to live when Mr. Peirce retired from business. Their fortune was estimated to exceed $150,000, but dwindled during the last years of Mr. Peirce's life and for the two years following his death.

At that time Mrs. Peirce, according to the testimony, called upon her cousin, Curtis Eames Hill, for assistance. She left the management of her estate in his care and through his handling of it the estate was enhanced nearly $15,000.

PRAISE

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

Should one be praised for doing things well? The Good Book does not seem to encourage it always. The man who has kept the entire law has done only what was his duty to do, and so is entitled to no particular commendation, we are told. Why should a man be praised for doing what he ought to be expected to do?

However that may be, I have always enjoyed a little praise when I have done something difficult or well. It stimulates me to greater effort; it kindles my imagination, and often makes it possible for me to do something even better than I had done the first time.

Praise does not always act as a stimulant, however. I recall two brothers whom I once had in class when I was trying to teach English composition. They were both redheaded and both lazy and temperamental. If Walter did something good and you told him about it, he would break his neck to do better. Not so with George. If he were praised he preened his feathers, as it were, and sat contentedly and lazily in the sun. Praise stagnated him. If he were as good as I had said, he saw no reason for being any better. It made him self-satisfied.

The effect of praise often depends upon the source from which it comes, and the infrequency with which it is given.

It is said of G. F. Swift, the former head of the great packing establishment of Swift & Co., that he never praised anyone. He held that praise weakened a man, inhibited his ambition and set for him the ultimate aim of his effort. He rewarded successful effort by promotions or raises in salary, but he seldom if ever told a man in so many words that he had done any piece of outstanding work.

He held that praise tended to make a man self-satisfied, it led to an overestimate of his worth, and slowed him down in his efforts. When he thought a man had stuff and possibilities in him, he called him into the office and pointed out to him his faults.

Maybe that's the best way to stimulate a man, but I like a little praise once in a while.

TWEEDS FOR SPRING

The spring trotteur is a one-piece frock, preferably done in tweeds. The dress in the picture is of green and white mixture, with touches of white pique at the neckline and cuffs.

Has Confidence of Community

W. N. Weeks of Augusta, Ga., president of the Weeks Banking company, wants to get out of the banking business and become a grocer, but his depositors won't let him do so. All of them refuse to withdraw their funds from his bank, behaving like Miss Lucille Kneeland, who is seen above declining to receive her deposit from Mr. Weeks.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By WALTER TRUMBULL

General Gatley, first with the Thirtieth and later with the Forty-Second division in the World war, made his reputation long before, in the Philippines, as the commander of a mountain battery. He would take his guns apart, pack them on mules, and transport them to heights seemingly impossible for field guns to go into action. One day a supply mule, attracted by something in the valley, stretched its neck too far over the edge of a mountain trail, lost its footing and plunged many hundred feet to the rocks below. The then Captain Gatley strode to the edge, looked down at the dark spot that was the defunct mule, and said, "Serves you right, you inquisitive son of a jackass!"

His men tell countless stories concerning him. After he went to the Rainbow division, an artillery officer who had been up observing fire, told me that one night, in the dark of a front line trench, he stepped on a sleeping figure rolled in a blanket. From the language which ensued, he knew it was the general, although he couldn't figure out exactly how an artillery brigadier happened to get there. But General Gatley was likely to be anywhere, except at the rear.

One of General Gatley's slogans was that a military encampment was no place for dogs, yet he once had a dog to which he was devoted. It was a brindle bulldog, named Wop by the soldiers, given to the general by Col. John S. Hammond, now vice president of Madison Square garden, who served with Gatley all over the world. Knowing how the general felt about dogs, Hammond tried to keep Wop out of sight, but, as preparations were being made for a practice march, Gatley caught sight of him. Colonel Hammond supposed he had lost his dog and so he had, but not as he thought. The general said to him, "If that dog should happen to ride in the rear of the mess wagon, I won't see him. Understand?" Colonel Hammond understood, but later had a fight with his tentmate over the dog, which was addicted to eating toothbrushes and pajamas. By way of settling the matter, General Gatley promptly had Wop removed to his own tent, and finally Colonel Hammond officially relinquished all claim to him.

Once General Gatley told me that he was about to advance me in rank, but, knowing well that my amateur standing as a soldier would never be open to question, he added, "Just because I am doing this, don't get the idea that you are any gol darn Napoleon." Only the general never said "gol darn." Finally he sent me with an advance detachment to France, for purposes of study and observation. We were on a practice range at the time and the general was quartered in a little wooden shack. It was night when we left and he had put in a hard day. Going to say good-by to him, I found him in bed, with only that warlike red head of his showing above the covers. I thanked him and told him I would do my best. Rearing up on his elbow, he bellowed at me:

"What the hell do you think I am sending you over there for?"

But, as I left him, he called after me, "God bless you, boy. Take care of yourself." That was why men would follow General Gatley. When he died recently, they blew taps over a soldier with a brave and kindly heart.

I talked recently with a girl, blind from birth, who had been abroad. She told me some things concerning Europe I had never seen, and many I had never heard. Her impressions were extraordinarily accurate and colorful; a strange thing to say of one who does not know color, but true. Except for what she sees through another's eyes, places to her are things of sound, scent and touch, and each is clearly differentiated in her mind.

Criminals Unafraid of United States Law

New York.—Criminal violence in the United States is still on the increase. Figures gathered by William L. Chenery, editor of Collier's Weekly, show that the total number of homicides has gone up more than 33 per cent in 16 years.

In 1912 the death rate due to homicide was 6.6 in every 100,000 of population. In 1928 the rate was 8.8, or exactly a third higher.

"Criminal violence causes far more deaths today than fifteen years ago," says Mr. Chenery. "The increase is an evidence of an appalling breakdown in respect for the law.

Laws More Drastic.

"During these same 15 years, laws in this country generally have been made more drastic. The so-called Baumes laws of New York are typical. Penalties have been added to penalties. If furious severity had power to prevent crime we should have become a law-abiding people.

"The truth is that severe penalties seldom deter criminals from violence. The explanation is that juries and judges will not inflict punishment which seems too rigorous. Rather than apply the law they will liberate the prisoner.

"The criminal does not fear uncertain punishment. If there is a chance to escape paying for his crime, the potential criminal will gamble on getting away. In this country the chances favor the criminal."

Homicide on Increase.

In thirty-one large American cities 2,419 homicides were reported in 1929. The rate was 10.1, much higher than for the country as a whole.

The increase in the number of homicides in the big cities between 1900 and 1929 was nearly fourfold, while the increase in the rate for each 100,000 of population increased from 5.1 to 10.1, almost double. New York reported 425 violent killings and Chicago 401 in 1929.

Only Nine Pay Penalty.

Yet in 1928, with 401 killings in New York City alone, the entire state of New York convicted only 118 killers and of these criminals only 9 were executed.

The experience of every country which has successfully controlled its criminal problem shows that swiftness and certainty of punishment, rather than severity, actually deter potential criminals from crime.

For many years Great Britain has had a remarkable record in preventing crime. While 425 killings occurred in New York in 1929 and, in Chicago, 401, London had only 10.

The British actually enforce capital punishment. Sentimental pleas for mercy go unheeded. The murderer pays with his life for his crime if he challenges British justice.

Time to Water

High School Girl, Aged 17, Makes Flight Alone

Seattle.—With only eight hours of flying at an aviation school, divided into four hours a year ago and four hours this winter, Miss Lela Newman made a solo flight of half an hour, achieving the triple feat of making a perfect takeoff, landing and the record of the youngest flyer ever to solo in the Northwest.

Miss Newman is only seventeen, and her father, Maj. Bill Newman, operator of the Newman Flying school, believes she is the youngest girl solo flyer in the country.

She is a student at the Franklin high school and president of the Franklin High School Aviation club and member of the Women's National Aeronautical association.

She comes naturally by her bent for the air, as her father has a background of 15 years of flying. He was a member of the British air forces during the World war, with two years of service in France, where he won distinction.

Miss Newman figured in the news recently when she made her first parachute jump September 21 last, averting a serious accident by skillfully steering the "chute" away from high tension wires into which she was falling.

Old House Proves Gold Mine to Its New Owner

Gatesville, N. C.—A "gold mine" has been found by C. E. Smith, a farmer, near here, but it is not in the ground. It is in an "old house."

The old house standing on Smith's farm happened to have been built and furnished back in 1775.

Shortly after Smith bought the farm, antique seekers began fairly swarming down on him and the ramshackle old house. He already has sold enough antique furnishings—mantels, locks, doors, windows, window blinds, staircase and what not—to pay off the mortgage on the farm.

DURANT TELLS OF LEGISLATIVE ACTIVITIES

March 27, 1931

Klemme Times,
Klemme, Iowa.

I am sending the Times a few lines in regard to legislation. We're very busy since the recess. We have had the pleasure of entertaining about 1500 farmrs from Cedar County. They filled the House of Representatives to over flowing. They objected to the compulsory T. B. test on cattle and emphasized their objections very emphatically from 1:00 p. m. until 11:00 p..m. They also protested against the County assessor bill. The Income Tax was passed by the house nd sent over to the senate. The senate passed the County Assessor bill and sent it over to the House but the House defeated the County Assessor bill and laid the motion to reconsider same on the table The Senate amended the Income tax bill by adding the County assessor bill thereto but have not sent it to the House for consideration.

House File 174 and 340 in regard to the M. D.'s and Ostepathic Doctors was debated recently when the House acted as the Committee of whole. The result was that a Subcommittee was appointed to try to effect a compromise. A bill was passed by the Senate and the House which provides that the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court serve for a term of six months rather than a year as heretofore.

Senate File 133 that has passed the Senate was passed by the House Friday of last week. This bill relates to Motor Vehicles and Traffic on the Highways.

The House has appointed a Steering committee and they have the power to report bills to the House for passage. The Sifting committee in the House will probably be appointd next week. There is in the Legislature discussion to recession or adjournmnt. The reason for this is on account of the submitting of the constitutional amendment to the vote of the people, June 16.

Yours very respectfully,
S. B. DURANT

BETTER FEED HENS WELL NOW

Feed Is Cheap, Egg Prices Likely to Improve—Cochran

With lower feed costs and increas ed production, some egg producers have actually been receiving more money from poultry this spring than last year over the same period of time. This is because more eggs have been sold and because they have been produced at a lower feed cost.

In order to realize the most profit from the farm flock the chickens should be given the best of care and the best of feed (a balanced feed at a minimum cost) thruout the entire producing period.

From all prsent indications egg prices will gradually improve and shoud be very satisfactory by next fall. Only flocks that have been closely culled and only the best producers kept well fed and well cared for will be able to show the maximum returns this year and be in good condition to produce the maximum number of eggs next fall when prices are more satisfactory.

MRS. EMMA GIBBS

The following is taken from Rev. H. E. Whyte's sermon which he preached at the funeral of Mrs. Emma. Gibbs. The Times reproduces these lines as a fitting tribute to our former Postmistress:

Text—Daniel 12-13—Go thou thy way until the end be, for thou shall rest; Stand in thy lot at the end of thy days."

Surely it must be said of Mrs. Gibbs that she heroicly and patiently went her way and that she stood in her lot until the end of her days. She has earned her rest and reward

Even on Monday she was in the offic part of the time and on duty. But before another day had dawned God opened the door of Eternityand bid her enter into her rest. She has gone to that land from whence no traveler returns, and her going has left an empty place in her home in our community and in our harts.

Her lot in life was not an easy one —she carried a heavy load and she did it willingly and unselfishly, and without compaint.

The value of her service to the young life of the community as a tacher in our public school in which capacity she served so efficiently and so well can never be measured. Her service as postmistress has been none the less helpful and efficient She gave her best to vrything she undertook and the memory of her life and her service will not soon be forgotten

It should also be said that while she served her community so well she also maintained and cared for her family and her home wth all the efficiency and affection of a true and loving mother. In that capacity she will also be missed more than words can tell.

"Well done, good and faithful servant; enter into the joy of the Lord."

Card Of Thanks

We wish to thank our friends and neighbors for their kindness and help shown us during our recent sorrow, and thank the business men of Klemme and other organizations, and all those who contributed flowers and offered words of sympathy and encouragment in our hour of bereavement for our departed Mother.

STILLE ELECTED KLEMME MAYOR

BAILEY AND GOLL NEW MEN ON KLEMME TOWN COUNCIL

Jost, Larsen, Quandt, Waterman, And Johnson Re-elected

The Town Election held in Klemme Monday was a rather tame affair with only about a half voting strength shown at the polls. There were but 136 ballots cast, where in former years a total of around 250 people usually vote. The lack of two complete tickets may have been the cause for the disinterest in the town election this year.

Stille Is The New Mayor

J. E. Stille, who was unopposed received 106 votes for Mayor. C. G. Waterman received 104 votes for treasurer, unopposed. Joel Johnson. unopposed for Assessor gathered in 103 votes.

Two New Men On Council

H. J. Bailey injected some added enthusiasm as a "dark horse" by deciding to enter the race and got his name on the ticket just a few minutes before the ballots were in the hands of the printer. Bailey proved a good bet for he ran second high for Councilman. Bailey's name was added to fill a vacancy on the ticket filed as the result of the Caucus which was held some two weeks ago.

G. A. Goll is another new man on the Council as the result of Monday's election.

C. A. Larsen. H. F. Jost and Conrad Quandt, who are old timers on the town board were re-elected by a safe margin.

As the new Council now stands it is composed of three business men, two retired farmers, and a Mayor, also retired. It ought to be a good combination and all factions, if any, are represented.

John Etchen, R. A. Jorgenson, F. W. Kluckhohn and W. C. Keraus were among those "who also ran," for Council.

The new Mayor and Council will be sworn into office Monday, when they can go into action.

DR. ANDERSON GAVE FINE TALK BEFORE SUNDAY SCHOOL

Dr. D P. Anderson gave a very interesting talk at the close of the Methodist Sunday School on the subject of "The Greatest Need of Today," in which he stressed the value of education. He compared the public school with the Sunday school and brought out some interesting points, stating that all too frequently the child did not show the same interest in Sunday school as in every day school; that the public school teacher were paid for their services, while the Sunday school teachers give of their time and money and sometimes are not even thanked for their services. Dr. Anderson brought out three important phases of education, viz. Home School and Religious Sducation.

County Agent Gibes Some Valuable Hints On Care Of Orchard

Now is the time to make preparations for giving your orchard trees a dormant spray if they are infected with Oyster Shell Scale. Remember ,that the ideal time to spray is just before growth starts. This being the case the spraying should be done within the next three weeks.

If you think that it is going to freeze hard the night after you intend to spray put off the job for a day or two. The freezing will not injure the trees but will spoil the effect of the spray.

There are different mixtures you can use to combat the Oyster Shell scale namely, dry lime sulphur 15 lbs. in 50 gallons of solution; liquid lime sulphur can be used also and Sunoco or Dondrol oil sprays are both very effective. The oil sprays are much nicer to work with and require less time for preparing the mixture.

H. E. Nochols of the Extension Service will be in the county the 13 and 14 of April to give the two dormant spray demonstrations using both the oil sprays mentioned above and the lime sulphur. He will also answer any questions on pruning and diseases that you might have. On the 13 the demonstration will be held at the J. J. Urich farm while on the 14 it will be at the C. D. Daniels farm.

Also remember that to be effective a thorough job must be done as one branch missed means infestatio again the coming year.

Spring seeding is here again and may I urge each farmer to treat his small grain before seeding. In all experiments run on seeding it was found to pay big for the time labor and money spent. The cheapest treatment for oats is formaldehyde. One pint in 10 gallons of water will treat about 50 bushel however the dust may be used but are high priced costing from 10 to 11 cents per bushel. Then, too, don't forget to treat your corn. Treated corn will outyield non-treated corn.

Farmers, what are you doing with the rats that are infecting your buildings? Rats will not stay long if the food supply is cut off. It has been estimated that it cost $2.00 to keep one rat for a year. Using this figure I am sure that the animals take or destroy foodstuffs or other products totaling in value more than the total taxes on the place during the year. Why not talk more about disposing of the rats and less about taxes? One can be controlled but the other is always going to be withus.

Rats may be controlled by various methods. The most permanent method is the use of rat proof buildings When this is not possible poisoning, trapping and fumigating can be used along with a good dog or cat. As baits, red squill and barum carbonate are both effective. The exhaust from your car is also good to drive them out, killing many and those not killed will usually go over to your neighbors.

Calcium Cyanide is a very effective gas for killing rats providing you can hold the gas in the runway. The farm bureau has a Cynogas gun that they are more than glad to loan out to anyone who will take the time to use it. For the effectivenss of the calcium cyanide gas, I will refer you to John Freerkson of Kanawha

If you are interested in rat control and wish a bulletin on same, feel free to write, call or come into the farm bureau office for such a bulletin. The bulletin not only deals with rats but the control of rodents in general. They are yours for the asking.

TO RENT

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

The Culver house has been standing for a good many years. It was one of the first houses built in the town and one with which I was pretty familiar when a boy. We thought it an elegant place then, for the Culver family was one of the oldest and most aristocratic in the community. Like all such families are likely to do,—they had disintegrated.

Marriage and death and a desire for change had each done its work and there was no member of the family left, and the house had passed into other hands.

I walked by it one day recently and there was a "To Rent" sign on the porch and in the window. The house still had character, though there were no modern touches in its architecture. But it was unkempt. Whoever now owned it, had not recently spent any money in keeping it in repair, hoping, I suppose, to get a reasonable return upon his investment without sinking anything further in the property.

And yet there were great possibilities in the house. Its lines were excellent, its situation attractive, situated as it was far back from the street amid pine trees and overhanging elms. A little paint, a few repairs, a clearing up of the yard, and a few hours given to trimming the shrubbery and the trees, would have made the place beautiful as it had once been. As it is, it will stand a long time bearing the sign "To Rent." The man who owns it evidently is not a good business man.

Grant was a great horse trader in our rural community, and what is more uncommon, he seemed to prosper in the business. He could see more possibilities in a skinny ill-groomed horse than anyone else I have ever known. He would pick up one of these crowbaits, feed him well, curry and brush him until, he used to say, he could see his face in the animal's glossy coat, and then sell him for three times what he cost. He believed that if he had anything to sell he should first put it into the best possible condition to attract attention. He put up no "To Rent" signs on run-down property.

By WALTER TRUMBULL

The usual New York crowd of sky-gazers circled around the big truck to superintend the hoisting of a huge steel girder to its destined resting place, many stories above the street. The ground end of the job was being expertly handled by two big fellows and another worker, who made up in breadth what he lacked in height. As the attached cables started the girder on its upward way, it slipped, ever so slightly, in its sling. The two stalwarts instantly leaped clear of the truck and came to a stop only when they were well outside of any danger zone. The squat gentleman, on the other hand, stood as steadfast as the boy on the burning deck, calmly watching the mass of steel right itself and resume its skyward journey. This display of stoicism evidently annoyed the two who had retreated so hastily. As they returned, one said disgustedly to the still placid slab of humanity:

"Say, ain't you nobody's sweetheart?"

Charles Hanson Towne was enumerating for me those known in the arts who had come from his birthplace, Louisville. He named Thompson Buchanan, Fontaine Fox, Henry and Shelley Hull, and Isaac Marcosson. Then he turned to A. E. Thomas, who was sitting close by.

"Were you born in Louisville, Al?" he asked.

"No," said Mr. Thomas, "I was not, and I can mention several other cities where I was not born, but which, strangely enough, appear to have achieved a certain measure of recognition."

As a matter of fact, Mr. Thomas originally was a mountain boy. He came from the Berkshires.

A man driving his automobile down Long island picked up a little urchin who was tramping along the road. He began to talk to him pleasantly.

"What do you do out of school hours?" he asked.

"Oh," said the small boy proudly, "I help my father and mother. They showed me how to fall out of cars, without hurting myself, and people give them money."

In another moment a little urchin was again tramping along the road.

A tender-hearted New York woman recently sailed for Europe. When the ship reached Southampton, she was distressed by cries and moans, which came through the dusk from the direction of a nearby dock, and insisted upon knowing what the trouble was. A fellow passenger hazarded the reasonable guess that the sounds came from a boatload of cattle, destined for France. This so upset the woman that she sat down and wrote a scathing letter to the local S. P. C. A. It was later discovered that the anguished cries had been produced by a dredge, working all night on the nearby channel.

Satisfied to Keep "Bad Dime"

Detroit.—The little man with the big derby seemed to be a foxy sort of gent. Almost all of the other passengers on the bus could sense that.

From the moment he got on at Oak street, stabbed a dime into the gadget that rings them up and swaggered over to sit on the edge of one of those seats that are built for three people and hold two and a half, you could tell that he was not ordinary.

Maybe it was that cocky but nervous air about him. Or maybe the uneasy glances he cast about as he sat down. Anyway, the bus driver-conductor especially seemed to take a sudden dislike to the little man with the big derby. Every time he stopped the coach for a traffic light he turned in his seat and scowled at the foxy gent.

When the bus stopped at the link bridge the driver-conductor slid out of his seat and made his way down the aisle to the little man with the big derby. Extending a calloused palm in which nestled a small coin, he roared at the little man with the big derby:

"Did you try to put over this dime on me?"

"I don't know," the foxy gent responded. "Maybe I put it in, maybe some one else put it in, how do I know? I don't remember."

"Hm!" snorted the driver-conductor. "With all of these jokers riding the busses nowadays I been studying coins and new-miss-matics. I'll keep this dime myself, then. It's dated 1802 and worth thirty bucks!".

It was a permanent Indian village at the time Massasoit was the sachem and it figured in the King Philip war. Podunk's population is about 200.

School of Penology Opened

Ossining, N. Y.—School days have begun for Sing Sing's 200 keepers and the newly founded school of penology has opened its doors within the prison walls. The courses, designed to make each keeper as courteous as a courtier, as versatile as a major domo and as wise as a philosopher, vary as profusely as the crimes attributed to their charges.

They range from etiquette to jiu-jitsu, from medicine to character training, from efficiency to law, to say nothing of those courses which would make the keeper a comforter of the afflicted, an executive, a disciplinarian, and an arbiter on matters military.

Dr. C. V. Branham, deputy commissioner of correction, opened the school with a lecture explaining its purpose. The entire course, which looks from the first announcement like the curriculum of a great university, will be covered in one month.

When information about the studies reached the cell blocks by the grapevine route loud guffaws were reported to have been heard. "If they don't know most of that stuff now," the occupants were said to have declared in substance, "they must be mighty dumb." For Sergt. Benjamin Feisler has the task of instructing the keepers in how to lock and unlock doors and gates, what to do when a prisoner breaks up his cell, the necessity of staying at one's post, and like subjects.

But if the remarks were passed the keepers held their heads high and chests thrust out like colonels of the Mulligan guards and heard nary a giggle. Were they not to become experts in law through the ministrations of Supreme Court Justice W. F. Bleakley, District Attorney Frank Coyne, and County Judge George Champlin? And in diagnosis, allopathy and public health through Dr. C. C. Sweet and other physicians, and in machine gunnery through Major Fitzgerald?

They expect to learn much from Warden Lawes, who will lecture on the proper carriage, language, and dignity expected from a keeper. And on other things, such as when a convict should be patted on the head and when he should be slugged, when he should be comforted and when he should be chided.

When the courses are completed the keepers will be examined to determine how much of their lessons they have absorbed. It was facetiously reported within the walls that those keepers who intend to pass with high marks are planning to open prisons of their own.

"A forger," he said, "was dropping very hard in a night club. The hostess, an old friend, unselfishly chided him to task about it.

"'I can't help that,' said the forger. 'I've had terrible hard luck and I got to forget it somehow.'

"'What hard luck?' said the hostess.

President Hoover on Business and Pleasure Trip to Porto Rico and Virgin Islands—Mayor Walker Under Fire.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

Gov. Theodore Roosevelt

PRESIDENT HOOVER and a "stag party" sailed from Norfolk, Va., Thursday morning on the reconditioned battleship Arizona for a twelve day trip on which the Chief Executive planned to combine rest and pleasure with business. Included in the party were Secretary of War Hurley, Secretary of the Interior Wilbur, Capt. William Furlong, who handles navy island matters; Capt. Charles R. Train, naval aide; Col. Campbell Hodges, army aide; various other officials from the White House, and a bunch of newspaper men and photographers. Capt. C. S. Freeman was in command of the Arizona and the vessel carried a full complement of 90 officers and 1,244 men for it was making a shaking down run after being rebuilt.

The first stop was at San Juan, Porto Rico, and the President for two days was to be the guest of Governor and Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt at La Fortaleza, the old mansion in which governors of the island have resided from the early days of the Spanish regime. It was planned that Mr. Hoover should make a tour of the island in order to observe industrial, agricultural and social conditions, meet the leaders of the political parties and gain a general idea of the success Governor Roosevelt has attained in meeting the problems of the Porto Ricans, which are many and serious.

The governor in his official reports and in communications to the American papers has given detailed pictures of the distress obtaining in the island. Sixty per cent of the people are out of work, he said, either all or part of the year.

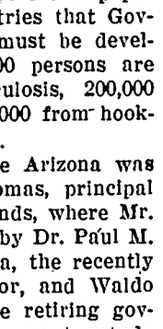
The population density is exceeded by few countries. It is 440 to the square mile and even intensive agriculture would not support this population. So it is industries that Governor Roosevelt says must be developed. More than 35,000 persons are suffering from tuberculosis, 200,000 from malaria, and 600,000 from hookworm.

From Porto Rico the Arizona was to proceed to St. Thomas, principal port of the Virgin Islands, where Mr. Hoover was to be met by Dr. Paul M. Pearson of Philadelphia, the recently appointed civil governor, and Waldo Evans of the navy, the retiring governor. With them he was to study the problems of the group, which are as serious as those of Porto Rico. The Virgin Islands used to prosper on the manufacture of rum and the transshipment of European cargoes for the entire Caribbean region. The prevailing economic distress is the result of prohibition and the conversion of coal burning vessels to oil consuming ships.

Only a few days ago the control of the Virgin Islands was transferred from the Navy to the Interior department, and now in Washington it is suggested that one result of the President's visit may be the amalgamation of the group with Porto Rico as a single political unit administered by one governor.

THEODORE G. JOSLIN, Washington correspondent of the Boston Transcript, has been made secretary to President Hoover to succeed George Akerson, resigned. Mr. Joslin is a close personal friend of Mr. Hoover. His main duties will be arranging the President's calling list, handling visitors at the executive offices and maintaining contact between the President and the correspondents.

The new secretary is an experienced political reporter and has a wide acquaintance among public men. He is a native of Massachusetts and is forty-one years old.



Samuel Seabury

DEVELOPMENTS in the campaign to clean up New York city politically are coming rapidly. During the week formal charges of neglect and unfitness were filed against Jimmy Walker, the dapper and debonair mayor of the metropolis, now regaling himself in California. The charges were presented to Governor Roosevelt by leaders of the city affairs committee and were said to be of such a nature as to compel the governor to take some action toward widening the investigation now being conducted by Samuel Seabury and confirmed by police and magistrates.

Governor Roosevelt had let it become known that he would not respond to any public clamor for a city-wide investigation and that he would act only upon specific charges, such as led him to appoint Seabury to investigate the conduct of District Attorney Thomas C. T. Crain. Previously Seabury had been put in charge of an investigation of police frameups in vice cases and of the conduct of city magistrates.

The governor was asked by Crain to revoke the appointment of Seabury on the ground of bias, but refused, and Crain was summoned to appear and answer the charges made against him by the City club.

Republican members of the state legislature were still trying to put through a resolution for a general inquiry into New York conditions, but were blocked by several recalcitrant members of their own party.

DURING the next three months, it was announced at the White House, President Hoover will carry out an extensive speaking program, delivering eight addresses and making nine public appearances. Besides this, he is contemplating a trip to his home in Palo Alto, Calif. The subjects of his speeches have not been announced, but it is understood he will take the opportunity to set forth his own estimate of the achievements of his administration so far and his aims for the future. Thus he will be in a measure taking up the challenge put out by the progressives at their recent conference in Washington.

The speaking calendar for the President as arranged is:

April 13—American Red Cross in Washington.

April 14—Pan-American Day, Pan-American Union, Washington.

May 4—International Chamber of Commerce, Washington.

May 21—Fiftieth anniversary of the Red Cross, Washington.

May 30—Memorial Day, Valley Forge, Pa.

June 15—Republican Editorial Association, Indianapolis, Ind.

June 16—Dedication of Harding Memorial, Marion, Ohio.

June 17—Dedication of Lincoln Memorial, Springfield, Ill.

In addition to these engagements, the President is to review veterans of the Grand Army of the Republic at their reunion June 16 in Columbus, Ohio.

Senator Johnson

SENATOR HIRAM Johnson of California, who is one of the most independent members of the upper house, thinks the recent conference of progressive leaders was a "fine thing" and that the leaders of the Republican party should call a similar meeting, adding: "Only good can come from such gatherings." He is convinced that "something is radically wrong somewhere" with the Republican party.

Mr. Johnson gave out a statement in which he agreed with some of the progressive doctrines and disagreed with others, but said that "public consideration, study and discussion constitute the contribution and value of the conference." He asserted the country was naturally interested in unemployment, representative government, the power question, monopoly's encroachments and public utilities, adding:

"Some of our Republican brethren not only belittle the effort but would transmute it into the one public matter of concern to them—politics. But a philosophic onlooker who long ago marked his own course, and prefers in his own way to follow it, might suggest that only progressives, in the interim between sessions, bring these vital questions up in public meeting for public discussion. Can any one imagine the standpat wing of either party meeting together with earnest and able experts and publicly discussing economic problems?"

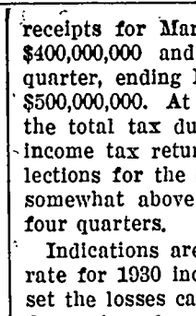
DEATH once more has changed the political make-up of the house of representatives which will assemble in December. James B. Aswell of Louisiana, Democrat and ranking minority member of the agricultural committee, passed away at his apartment in Washington after a heart attack. He was sixty-two years old and had served in congress for nine consecutive terms.

Mr. Aswell's death leaves in the house 217 Republicans, 215 Democrats and one Farmer-Laborite. Representatives John F. Quayle and David J. O'Connell, both Democrats of New York, died last winter. Their successors, Matthew V. O'Maley and Stephen A. Rudd, are both Democrats. Representative Henry Allen Cooper, Republican of Wisconsin, died last March 1. His successor has not been chosen.

EVERYONE has now filed his income tax return, or should have done so, and the experts in Washington are busy figuring up how much Uncle Sam will receive. Treasury officials could not yet make definite predictions as to the collections for the first quarter, but they hoped that the receipts for March would run above $400,000,000 and those for the first quarter, ending March 31, well above $500,000,000. At least one-fourth of the total tax due was paid with the income tax returns filed, so that collections for the first quarter will run somewhat above the average for the four quarters.

Indications are that the higher tax rate for 1930 incomes will fail to offset the losses caused by the economic depression by around $100,000,000. Last year's collections for the first quarter were $628,000,000.

PROBABLY twenty men perished when the sealer Viking was blown up in White bay, Newfoundland. Of the survivors 118, many of them badly injured, managed to reach little Horse island, where a few inhabitants tried to care for them with inadequate food and no medical supplies. Several others were picked up by vessels that sped to the rescue, called by the messages of the young girl radio operator on the island. Besides the large crew the Viking carried the members of a moving picture expedition.



Secretary Doak

ONE of the earnest hopes of the American Federation of Labor—the affiliation of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen with the federation—is soon to be realized, according to dispatches from Washington. Representatives of both bodies and of certain affiliated railway workers' unions were engaged during the week in drafting the terms of an agreement for the amalgamation. Representing the federation in the conference were President William Green, Secretary Frank Morrison and Vice President J. M. Bugeniazet, who also is secretary of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. Sitting in for the trainmen were President Albert Whitney and James Farquarson, legislative agent.

The drafting conference was the culmination of negotiations that have been in progress for a year, in which Secretary of Labor Doak, in his former capacity as legislative agent of the trainmen's organization, is said to have played an important part.

UNEXPECTEDLY heavy demands by World war veterans for loans have made it necessary for the treasury to raise $200,000,000 in less than a month. Secretary Mellon announced a request by Veterans' Administrator Hines for $500,000,000 to cover payments on 1,372,006 applications received up to March 15. It had been estimated $300,000,000 would suffice, and 1½ per cent treasury certificates were issued to get that sum. Hines said, however, the $500,000,000 would be needed by April 11.

The veterans' administrator also told Mellon $1,000,000,000 would be required to pay all loans.

MAL DAUGHERTY, brother of former Attorney General Harry M. Daugherty, was sentenced at Washington-Courthouse, Ohio, to ten years in prison and a fine of $5,000. He was convicted recently of abstracting funds from the now defunct Ohio State bank of which he was president and was refused a new trial.

Cardinal Maffi

PIETRO CARDINAL Maffi, archbishop of Pisa and one of the most eminent members of the sacred college, is dead in Pisa at the age of seventy-three years. In his earlier years he gained fame as an astronomer and teacher of philosophy; he was made archbishop in 1903 and four years later was raised to the purple by Pope Pius X. The same pope, it was rumored, considered deposing him because he supported the modernists in a contest with the reactionaries in the church. Twice, afterward, Maffi was considered a papal possibility. He was always a great friend of the Italian royal family, and he officiated last year at the marriage of Crown Prince Humbert of Italy and Princess Marie Jose of Belgium. For this he was given the Collar of the Annunziata, the highest gift of the crown.

Cardinal Maffi's death reduces the Italian membership in the sacred college to 28, against 30 foreign members. Therefore it is expected in Rome that a consistory will be held before long at which the pope will create a number of cardinals and give the Italians at least equal strength with the foreigners.

SO VARIED are the interests of different countries that the tariff armistice convention called at Geneva by the League of Nations is forced to report that it has failed to reach an agreement, though it has hopes that within a few years enough nations will ratify the pact to make it effective for Europe.

The conference was called by the league in an effort to secure a truce on the raising of tariffs and later to obtain a general reduction of tariffs. Only eleven countries ratified the truce clause and all eleven made important reservations. The usual reservation was, "If surrounding countries would also ratify."

FUSSY, fretful . . . . of course babies are uncomfortable at teething time! And mothers are worried because of the little upsets which come so suddenly then. But there's one sure way to comfort a restless, teething child. Castoria — made especially for babies and children! It's perfectly harmless, as the formula on the wrapper tells you. It's mild in taste and action. Yet it rights little upsets with a never-failing effectiveness.

That's the beauty of this special children's remedy! It may be given to tiny infants—as often as there is need. In cases of colic and similar disturbances, it is invaluable. But it has every-day uses all mothers should understand. A coated tongue calls for a few drops to ward off constipation; so does any suggestion of bad breath. Whenever older children don't eat well, don't rest well, or have any little upset, a more liberal dose of this pure vegetable preparation is usually all that's needed. Genuine Castoria has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper. Doctors prescribe it.

Methodical Chicagoan

Thirty years ago W. B. Cunningham, of Chicago, was late for work, so late he vowed he wouldn't be late again in ten years. In 1911 his vow was fulfilled, but the habit of punctuality was so strong that he kept right being on time each morning. When he punched the clock just the other day, on time, as usual, his thirtieth unblemished year passed into history. Housewives set their clocks by the time he passes their houses on his way to work.

Arbitrary French Mayor

The funeral of a rich landlord at Toulon, France, was stopped at the gates of the cemetery by a policeman acting ou the instructions of the mayor of the district. The mayor's order was that the funeral was of too elaborate a nature. It could not proceed until the relatives had made changes to give the simplicity in burial rites to which the place is accustomed.

Cheese-Carrying Planes

Travel in cold freight cars has a detrimental effect on good Camenbert cheese, the most temperamental of all cheeses, so producers in the region of St. Pierre-sur-Dives, in Normandy, have chartered airplanes and send weekly loads of 600 pounds each to choice clients in Paris. These cheese planes run on regular schedule.

This Woman In 4 Weeks Lost 17 Pounds of Fat

Here's a letter written October 21, 1929, by Mrs. Fred Barringer of Lewistown, Montana, that ought to be read by every overweight woman in America:

Gentlemen: I started taking Kruschen every morning as directed as I was very much overweight and wanted to reduce.

I had tried going on a diet but would get so hungry that my diet would not last long, so I decided to give "Kruschen Salts" a fair trial. The day I started to take them I weighed 256 lbs. and at present, which has been just four weeks, I weigh 239 lbs. And I must say, I feel better in every way, besides looking much better.

May all large people, both men and women, who want to reduce in an easy way, give Kruschen Salts a fair trial. I am sure it will convince anyone.

A bottle of Kruschen Salts that lasts four weeks costs but 85c at any drugstore in America. Take one half teaspoon in a glass of hot water before breakfast every morning. To help reduce swiftly cut out pastry and fatty meats and go light on potatoes, butter, cream and sugar.

The Kruschen way is the safe way to reduce—Try one bottle and if not joyfully satisfied—money back.—Adv.

NON-TAXPAYERS IN OFFICE

The Times has heard more or less criticism and read many editorials on the above subject. It is the general opinion of property owners that a man who is a heavy tax payer is, as a rule, the best man in a public office. A man who owns no property and pays no taxes, surely cannot show the same economy in spending public funds, as the office holder who owns property and pays taxes thereon.

RAILROADS AND HANCOCK COUNTY TAXES

The railroads certainly have a right to register a kick on unfair competition of trucks and buses.

In Hancock County alone the C. R. I. & P. Railway Co. pays into the Treasurer's office this year the sum of $34,135.59 in taxes The Milwaukee railroad pays in $19,234.22. We have not the figures of the M & St. L., but their miles of track compares with the Rock Island and so we can figure that the railroads are paying about $75,000.00 in taxes in Hancock County alone this year That sum is not to be sneezed at. What the trucks and buses pay in taxes is but a drop in the bucket.

The sad part about it all is that every tax payer in the county, including the railroads, is helping to provide paved and graveled roads for freight carrying trucks and passenger carrying buses a nice road bed on which to operate.

We need the railroads and we need the tax money they are paying into the county each year. Take the railroads away and you are going to pile more taxes on individual property.

Public sentiment is not in sympathy with these enemies of the railroads. Something is going to "pop" before many years and the public is going to stick to the railroads.

Matter of Orderliness More Than Being "Tidy"

If you talk to some folk about their lack of orderliness, they tell you, more often than not, that they cannot be bothered. Somehow they seem to love their disarrays. It is always odd to see a man happily doing his work in the midst of a pile of disordered papers.

It is all very well to enjoy such untidiness; but it does not seem economical; in fact, it is surely a waste of two things: time and pleasure. Time is, of course, very important in these days of speed, and to the majority of us the probability is that pleasure of orderliness is of second importance. I am not so sure that it is not almost as important as the saving of time. We must not rule out of our consideration psychological values, and that is what pleasure in work is—not only for ourselves, but for others.

Disorderliness in a home, on the bench or desk or table, is not pleasant to look upon. Besides, if we are orderly in our work, we shall be orderly in our mind; that means more effectiveness, and therefore greater success. We have no right to do anything, or have any method or lack of method, that retards progress.—"G. H. G." in London Tit-Bits.

Bee May Give Up Lease, but She's Good Tenant

About 8,000,000 colonies of bees acknowledge human protection in the United States and return for it more than 140,000,000 pounds of honey a year. It is a curious relationship that exists between men and bees. For no matter how long domesticated, the bee remains a true barbarian. Though she may trace her ancestry through hundreds of generations of hive-dwellers, she, without a moment's notice, may take to the woods, make her home in a hollow tree and revert completely to the primitive.

The compact between man and bee is that of landlord and tenant. The beekeeper tricks his bees into staying with him by furnishing apartments to their liking. But the bee never surrenders her liberty nor her complete right of choice. If she is not pleased with the condition of the new house offered her at swarming time, she promptly moves out and takes to tall timber.

But the beekeepers have learned to humor the fickle whims of their winged tenants. That 140,000,000 pounds of honey was worth about $23,000,000, a pretty good rental for the type of houses and service the bees required.

THE COMMUNITY AND ITS BANKS

By ROME C. STEPHENSON
President American Bankers Association

While upon the individual bankers there rests without qualification the direct responsibility for the prudent, honest conduct of their institutions, nevertheless the soundness of banking as a practical matter of fact is a community problem in which the public has a part to play as well as bankers and government officials charged with the supervision of banks.

R. C. STEPHENSON

In the first place, the assets of a bank, outside its government bonds, consist mainly of loans to business men and of investments in securities created by corporate enterprises. The deposits of a bank are not kept in the vaults as idle cash but are employed in these loans and investments to earn the money to pay the expenses of the bank so that it can render services to its customers and also pay them interest on such deposits as bear interest. If there were no such thing as unsound business men or enterprises there would be no such thing as unsound assets in a bank.

It is of course the unquestioned duty of the banker to choose only sound loans and investments, but the difficulty of such judgment, and human judgment is never infallible, is plainly increased in such times and under such conditions as we have been passing through, with many businesses not making expected earnings and therefore hampered in meeting their obligations. Unfortunately some investments and loans created by persons outside the banks which found their way into the banks in a relatively few instances have reflected the unwise business policies and conditions that became more than usually prevalent in our business activities and contributed to the difficulty of banking. The vast bulk of bank assets, however, are 100 per cent sound above all question.

"Hard Boiled" vs. "Easy" Banker

In another aspect the people of the community have a part to play in maintaining the soundness of their banks, and that is through the medium of patronage. The existence of a bank is dependent on public patronage. If only those banks were patronized in which the most careful policies were practiced and the most conscientious and able men in charge, it would go far toward maintaining the standards of banking. If business men in a community when refused loans by their banks for good and sufficient reasons because conditions are not favorable, thereupon withdraw their business to banks where less careful methods prevail, they clearly contribute to the creation of a less sound banking situation.

Also if, in the heat of competition, a banker offers higher interest rates or more free service to attract customers than the earnings of conservative banking justify, and is encouraged by the patronage of the public as against a more conservative bank, obviously the public is again playing a part in bringing about a less sound banking situation. It is an unfortunate fact that the banker who is strict, "hard boiled" if you please, is liable to be less popular than the "easy" banker, and by that same token the public itself has a voice in influencing the character of banking. Also it is the public in the end which pays the main part of the penalty if unfortunate results follow.

Still again the public can exert an influence in shaping the character of banking by supporting the purposes of bankers to maintain intelligent, independent, honest banking supervision by the public banking departments through insisting that this function of government shall be kept as free from political influence as the judiciary itself and shall be manned only by men of the highest ability and character.

In still another way can the people themselves contribute to maintaining the ability of their banks to meet their obligations, and this is by granting them the fullest possible confidence. As I said, the deposits are not kept as cash but are invested in loans and securities. Even the soundest assets of this type require some time to reconvert at full value into cash deposits. In many cases of bank troubles the only thing wrong with a bank was an unduly suspicious and apprehensive state of mind in its customers created by no act or condition of its own but by baseless rumors which sometimes led them to destroy the value of their own deposits by demanding them immediately, forcing a bank to sacrifice its assets and otherwise disrupt its financial operations.

Bankers Help

During the year 1930 the Bankers' Association of Langlade County, Wisconsin, worked out the finances for a cooperative milk plant, which entailed the raising of $100,000, and also sponsored an active 4-H-Club campaign that culminated in an "Achievement Day" program, in which upwards of 400 young people participated. The increase in the number interested in this work was 200 per cent over the past two year period.

Because it provides baby chicks with the extra nourishment they need for safe, rapid growth, Pro-Lac helps you grow broilers that weigh from 1¾ to 2½ pounds in six weeks' time, and pullets that start laying when scarcely five months old.

Surely you want your baby chicks to have this extra nourishment this year so that they will pay you back in extra profits and extra eggs. Just feed them Pro-Lac Buttermilk Starting-Growing Mash. Come in and let us show you the facts about this better feed.

MOR-GAIN MASH MAKER does not contain arm grown grains or fillers of any kind. It contains a limited amount of wheat feeds to add bulk ad variety to he mash. Godliver Oil, Dried Buttermilk, and Minerals, ingredients that make any mash high in price, are in MOR-GAIN MASH MAKER and in sufficient quantities to make a balance when your home grains are mixed with it.

Many poultry rasers are mixing their own laying mash—buying meat scraps, codliver oil, dried buttermilk, etc., but all these ingredients can be gought in one bag of Mor-Gain Mash Maker—it is always the same and you will have a good uniform mixture of protein feeds when the mash maker is mixed with your own ground grain.

HOW TO MIX YOUR OWN GRAIN WITH MOR-GAIN MASH MAKER—

To make an 18 per cent protein Mash:
100 lbs. Finely Ground Corn
100 lbs. Ground Hulled Oats
100 lbs. Mor-Gain Mash Maker

This makes a high protein mash for the flocks in good condition and producing heavily. (Whole ground oats may be used.)

THE LORD IS RISEN

Sing, soul of mine, this day of days.
The Lord is risen.
Toward the sunrising set thy face.
The Lord is risen.
Behold He giveth strength and grace;
For darkness, light; for mourning, praise;
For sin, His Holiness; for conflict, peace.
Arise, O soul, this Easter day!
Forget the tomb of yesterday,
For thou from bondage art set free;
Thou sharest in His victory
And life eternal is for thee,
Because the Lord is risen.

Divine Message in the Bursting Buds of Spring

The spring miracle, of which Easter is at once a symbol, and a culmination, is still, probably always will be, a puzzle to which natural science offers no solution. What is the force that makes life to pulsate where for months all has been deadness? What and where is the heart that sets all vegetable life a-going?

In defiance of ordinary law, water runs uphill in millions of tree trunks and flower stems; some hidden unexplainable mystery of life sends herbage up from myriads of graves, renewing plant lives in their own order, wintry death has given place to resurrection life.

How? Why? Shall we ever know enough about this mystery to be able to explain in terms of purely physical life? a writer in the Montreal Family Herald asks. To say that roots, bulbs, tubers have a germ of life in them which the spring season calls into vigor tells me nothing. How does it happen? Who gives the signal for it? What is this germ, this mystery of life? Can science make one? Where is the pump that sends billions of watery matter climbing up trees, and plants on top of the highest points in the landscape? Gravity can have nothing to do with it. Where is the great throbbing, pumping heart of nature? What controls it to stop at one time of the year and start again at another time? All that we can say about it is that a miracle happens each spring. Resurrection from the dead, worked by a Power outside of and beyond all our human mechanics?

Symbol in Spring Awakening.

As I wrote some years ago, it is my belief that spring is earth's Easter time, its rising again to renewed life; the vegetable kingdom printing upon the world's surface the all-important news for mankind: "Because I live, ye shall live also!" For the spring awakening is purely typical of the return of the life principle to the dead body of the second Adam or Head of our race at the "Spring of souls," when He too came forth from the ground with the promise of another summer and a blessed harvest time for mankind. It is that sure and splendid hope that makes Easter a festival time. It is founded on the angel's message to the women "Christ is risen from the dead!" It carries the logical corollary, confirmed by the Divine Master's own words, "Because I live, ye shall live also!" Every little pale green shoot in the woods and fields, every crocus, hepatica or spring beauty, and gleaming bloodroot blossom sings out if we would heed it.

Since I am here, doubt not He rose
And keep with me His Easter day.

Life After Winter's Deadness.

Easter comes most appropriately at the earth's resurrection time from its winter's deadness. Life from death is the message of spring and of Easter too. Death is no longer to be considered an ending, but only an interval between this life and another life, since that first of all Easter day dawned upon this world of humanity. Death is such an appalling fact, you know. Human nature instinctively dreads and rebels against it. It is something imported into humanity, which after all these centuries since man was first made still comes as a shock to it. We were not intended, not designed to meet that shock! None can escape it. Death comes to everyone as a stop to all worldly activities. That One had actually overcome death, and proved that it was for the future to be a gate to another, larger, compensating life, and no longer a prison gate, swinging open only one way, inwards, because of sin, was amazing news to the world. Only the Creator of man and the Manager of all things, could have accomplished a change like that! Just as we cannot but see that only He could set a-going that principle which works the spring miracle of life renewed out of wintry deadness.

Brought Hope to World.

It was something new to men, this application of the spring miracle to poor humanity. It meant that our sin no longer brought the inevitable, unavoidable penalty of eternal banishment from the light of heaven. Like the blessed spring it brought hope to the world. Just as every spring sent good faithful men out on to the land to sow their grain in hope of a harvest time, so might men stand by gravesides of their dead loved ones in sure and certain hope of a harvest-time resurrection from the dead.

There is no joy like that of Eastertide, and I think it is a fine thing to give expression to our joy. It was that impulse that taught men and women to wear something new at this season. The Easter hat has a significance of its own. It means that the lovely, ornamental part of humanity is rejoicing and very happy in the joy of Easter. It shows a responding to the angel message "He is Risen," and says with Him we have risen also to new hope, new life.

A few years ago a good bishop said a good deal in denunciation of "$25 actually, $25 paid for a new hat," and that by his faithful wife! I am not sure, but I imagine that since then a good many twenty-fives have gone the same way. And I cannot see anything blameworthy in the expenditure, if it has not taken money that should have been spent in other good works.

For the best, therefore the most representative part of humanity, thereby sets forth the joy of mankind in the Resurrection, and the happiness that has come to it from the defeat of sin and death by the Man, Christ Jesus. It is one way of letting our "joy be known unto all men," as an inspired writer advised.

Mandrake and Easter Connected in Iceland

In Iceland there is a quaint Easter superstition about that weird root, the mandrake. If one wishes to become suddenly rich—and who does not—he must possess a mandrake root and steal a coin from a poor widow at early mass on Easter Sunday. When the stolen coin is placed beside the mandrake it will, mysteriously and immediately, draw all coins of like denominations to itself from every individual's purse in the church. But the root can only exercise this magic when it is dug from the ground on Good Friday before sunrise by a man with a sharp sword and an undesirable black dog. Superstitions say that the terrible shrieks of the uprooted herb will immediately kill the black dog and therefore save the man and bring him luck and fortune. John of Arc is supposed to have carried at all times a female mandrake possesing great magical powers.

EASTER OMENS

IN ENGLAND and France it is considered a good omen to see a lamb on Easter morning when one first looks out of the bedroom window. If the lamb's head is turned toward the house any wish that is made will come true. It is commonly thought that the devil can take the form of any creature in the world except the lamb and the dove.

Colored Easter Eggs

When eggs first became identified with the Christian festival they were dyed red to commemorate the blood of Christ, shed on Calvary. But this practice did not remain universal, for it is recorded that Edward I, in 1305, ordered "450 dozen eggs to be stained in boiling and some to be covered with golf leaf" for distribution in the royal household.

The Boyhood of Famous Americans

By J. V. Fitzgerald

John Hays Hammond

The boys started on horseback from San Francisco to Oakland. Their aunt, with whom they were staying while their father was in the East, consented to the trip. They took a small compass, a shotgun, fishing tackle and $60 in money with them. Blankets were also in the extra equipment, for the lads planned on doing a bit of camping before and after they visited their friends in Oakland.

John Hays Hammond, the older of the two lads, was fourteen years old. His brother was two years younger. They had been brought up in the California of Civil war days and they were accomplished riders and skilled in the ways of the great outdoors by the time most boys of today are still playing with toys.

Their father, a graduate of West Point and an army officer detailed to duty in California, had taught them self-reliance, a love for outdoor life and instilled in them a spirit of adventure from the time they were able to walk. So it wasn't unnatural that they should make up their minds to see something of the world instead of merely taking the ride to Oakland and back to San Francisco.

They had heard much of the Yosemite valley, then a comparative wilderness, and they turned their horses' heads in that direction, seeking the adventure that appealed so much to their venturesome dispositions.

Occasionally they stopped at small hotels, but for the greater part they slept in the open. They shot their own game, varied their diet with the fish that abounded in the mountain streams and thrived on their own cooking. By the time they reached the Yosemite they still had a substantial part of their money left.

From there they ventured into Nevada and by the time their father returned from the East and traced them through express company agents they had ridden approximately 1,000 miles on horseback. And all this in a period of less than three months.

While seeing the country young John had an opportunity to inspect his first quartz mine. He spent several days watching the operations there. That experience was largely responsible for his choice of mining engineering as a profession, a career in which he has gained world wide renown and great fortune.

The trail that started with the trip to the Yosemite carried him to practically all parts of the world, through dangers and hair-raising adventures in South America, Africa and elsewhere and to friendships ranging from lowly miners to crowned heads.

John Hays Hammond was born in 1855 in San Francisco, to which city his father, who had been a major in the regular army during the Mexican war, had been detailed. His mother was a sister of Col. Jack Hays, famous as a Texas ranger, and later the first sheriff of San Francisco. Young Hammond spent much time at his uncle's home. His mother died when he was a little fellow.

His father and uncle, between them, taught him to ride, to swim and to hunt. He proved that he was an apt pupil when he and his brother made their 1,000-mile trip into the wilds depending largely on their skill with rod and gun to live as they rode through the lonely and rugged country.

The youngster was educated in the public schools of San Francisco. Later he went to a private preparatory school in New Haven to qualify for admission to Yale. He was enrolled in college at the age of seventeen and was graduted in 1876. At Yale he was a classmate of former President Taft.

From Yale he went to Germany where he spent three years in the Royal School of Mines at Freiberg. He returned to the United States and went to work for Senator George Hearst of California at $75 a month. His father wanted him to be a civil engineer, but the lure of mining was too great, and he turned down a better paying job with a railroad to begin his chosen career.

He made progress enough to warrant him in going into business for himself. For a time he was too poor to pay an office boy and swept out his own office. He rode through the dangerous Apache country on a business mission in 1882, later almost losing his life in troublesome Mexico.

He came into world-wide prominence when he went to South Africa to act as an expert for Barney Barnato and Cecil Rhodes at their vast diamond holdings. He was accused of being implicated in the Jameson raid on the Transvaal republic and was sentenced to death. But he was pardoned and went on to greater fame and fortune.

Family Resemblance

Sharon had a new baby brother. One evening at the dinner table she remarked that he looked very much like her father. The latter, doubtful but pleased, inquired where Sharon saw a resemblance.

"Well," replied Sharon, after thinking a moment, "you're both bald, aren't you?"

Lesson for April 5

JESUS TEACHES HUMILITY

GOLDEN TEXT—For whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted.

LESSON TEXT—Luke 14:1-14; 18:15-17.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus and the Children.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Teaches Consideration for Others.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Giving Others the Preference.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Spiritual Democracy.

I. Jesus Dining With a Pharisee (v. 1).

Jesus moved in all circles of human society, thus showing his divine sympathy. The Christian's influence is best when mingling with his fellows in all right relations and positions in life.

II. Jesus Healing a Man With the Dropsy (vv. 2-6).

1. Why this man was present (v. 2). While there is no way of absolutely determining, it was most likely a part of the plot of the Pharisees to trap Jesus by getting him to violate the Sabbath rules.

2. Jesus' question (v. 3). His question was an answer to the thoughts of the lawyers and Pharisees who were watching him. Before healing this man, he submitted his case to their judgment. They were free on the Sabbath to hold a feast where their selfish pride and vanity could be displayed, but they were horrified that a fellow man should be healed on that day.

3. Jesus healing the man (v. 4). While they were in a state of embarrassment, Jesus healed the man.

4. Jesus rebuked them (vv. 5, 6). He laid bare their hypocrisy by showing them that their willingness to show mercy to a beast on the Sabbath should induce them to regard as not sinful the relieving of a human being of distress on the Sabbath.

III. Jesus Rebukes Selfish Ambition (vv. 7-11).

1. The occasion (v. 7). He observed that the guests while taking their places at the table chose the best seats for themselves. This is still true of men and women in railway cars, hotels, street cars, etc.

2. Instruction given (vv. 8-11). When bidden to a feast take the lowest place lest you suffer the humiliation of being asked to take a lower seat. This is more than a lesson on courtesy or table manners. It was a severe rebuke of that selfishness which fills the human heart, causing it to seek to be ministered unto instead of ministering to others. The declaration of Jesus, "Whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted," sets forth the fundamental principle of the philosophy governing the moral world. The one who has experienced the redeeming love of Christ will gladly take the place assigned him.

IV. The True Motive in Deeds of Charity (vv. 12-14).

The Jews, like many of the rich today, made social dinners occasions for display. They invited only those whose wealth would enable them to recompense them by inviting them in return. Jesus took note of the selfishness thus displayed and set forth to them the right principle governing hospitable deeds. Such benevolent acts should be extended to the poor and afflicted. All charitable deeds should be done with unselfish motives. They should proceed from the one aim; namely, to confer benefits without expectation of a recompense. Jesus assured them, however, that recompense would be made at the resurrection of the just.

V. The Child Example (Luke 18:15-17).

1. Spiritual contact with Christ sought for children (v. 15). Presumably this was done by the parents. The time of all times to effect contact with Christ is in childhood.

2. Rebuked by the disciples (v. 15). Seeing Christ's time so completely taken up with adults, the disciples thought that bringing the children would be an instrusion.

3. Welcomed by Jesus (v. 16). Mark says, "Jesus was displeased with the conduct of the disciples"; that is, was indignant. Christ called the children unto himself, thus showing their relative value.

4. What he said about children (vv. 16, 17). "Of such is the kingdom of God." Childhood is the character which proves citizenship in the kingdom. Two traits are pre-eminent in childhood: (a) Absence of self-consciousness; (b) Natural trust. The way to realize this character is through surrender to Jesus Christ.

Teachings of the Bible

The foundations of our society and our government rest so much on the teachings of the Bible that it would be difficult to support them if faith in these teachings should cease to be practically universal in our country.—Calvin Coolidge.

Encouragement

Linens so white —can't believe her own eyes!

"WHAT a thrill, first time I used Rinso! I wouldn't believe such a thing possible, if I didn't see it with my own eyes. A sweet, snowy wash—without scrubbing or boiling! I never dreamed washday could be so easy. Rinso is a magical soap."

Scrubbing ruins things so — wears them threadbare—takes the brightness out of colors. But with Rinso there's no scrubbing! Dirt soaks out. Clothes last much longer.

Rinso is all you need, even in hardest water—no bar soaps, chips, softeners. Cup for cup, it gives twice as much suds as lightweight, puffed-up soaps. Suds that last!

Imitation Stradivari

Since it was reported several weeks ago that a Tazewell county (Virginia) man had a genuine Stradivarius violin for which a Roanoke musician had offered $40,000, more than two dozen "genuine Stradivariuses" have been discovered in southwest Virginia. Until a few years ago it was not against the law in Germany for violin makers to put labels with the name of Stradivarius on them in the inside of every instrument they turned out. Traveling agents evidently sold a great many of these cheap violins in the mountain district.

IOWA PLEASED OVER NATIONAL OLEOMARGARINE LAW

The passage of the amendments to the federal oleomargarine law which requires all colored oleomargarine to pay a ten cent tax regardless of the method used in coloring the product meets with the hearty approval of Iowa people, according to M. G. Thornburg, who recently made a trip to Washington, D. C. to urge its passage.

"Iowa Senators and Representatives all worked for the amendments," declared Mr. Thornburg. "Representative Thurston, who is a member of the rules committee, played an important part in getting his committee to allow the bill to come to a vote in the House and Senator Brookhart played an important part in getting a vote in the Senate before the short session closed.

"This bill means that palm oil cannot be used in producing yellow oleomargarine without the product paying a ten cent tax. This should abolish the unfair competition from colored oleomragarine of this character," stated Mr. Thornburg.

FUNNY FIGURES

Some of our readers love figures, so here are a few gatherer from a book of statistics snt out by the University of Iowa. It decares the average child knows 2,256 words. We suppose that includes "Gimme a nickel." Every child born in the United States is burdened with $200 of the national debt. Maybe that's what makes babies bawl so much. The average family pays $140 a year doctor bills. But how about the doctor's bills that are never paid? Six sacks of cement are produced every year for every prson in America. Now we know where brides gt the raw material for their first biscuits. This continent, according to statistics is 30,000 years old. That explains some of the cars we see on the highways. And again, science has invented a new type of paper that will stretch like rubber. Then why not petition Uncle Sam to us that kind for printing his paper money?

BEST CORN GROWER TELLS HOW HE DOES IT

USES Bluegrass Sod, Spring Plowed To Get High Yield

R. G. Schumaker, Cerro Gordo County farmer who won the Pennick and Ford trophy for the highest yield of corn in Iowa in 1930, describes how he raised the winning corn which produced 114.9 bushels to the acre. His average yield for the entire farm was 72 bushels an acre

The corn was grown in a field which had been in bluegrass the previous year and was springplowed 6 to 7 inches deep and disced and harrowed.

The corn was planted 1½ to 2 inches deep and 3 feet 4 inches each way which is narrower than most farmers plant. Sixty pounds of 3-6-8 fertilizer per acre were used. The corn was cultivated four times. Mr. Schumakr used a variety which he has developed by careful selection from Smith's Yellow Dent during the last seven years.

In addition to winning the state trophy given by Pennick and Ford of Cedar Rapids, he won he Cerro Gordo county corn yield contest sponsored jointly by the Cerro Gordo County Farm Bureau and the Masn City Brick and Tile Company.

COUNTY FARM BUREAU PLANS EXTENSIVE SPRAY SERVICE

Will Work With Iowa State College To Help Care For Orchards

Farmers, would you like to be warned when each spray should be applied to produce a healthy fruit crop?

If so. the 1931 spray service to be furnished by the County Farm Bureau cooperating with the Extension Service at Ames will help you. Just before time to apply each of the necessary orchard sprays during the season I will send you a card telling when to apply the spray and what to use.

Last year much of the fruit in the section was of poor quality due to faulty or no spraying. Spray time will soon be here. Take some rainy afternoon and see that the sprayer is in good working order. Secure now the spray materials necessary for the season's work. If you have had a bad infestation of one of the scale insects plan to apply a dormant spray some time during the next week or tendays. The dormant spray should be applied just before growth starts. Plan to attend the spray demonstrations announced in a separate article in this paper as H. E Nichols will be glad to advise as to what to use and how much.

Many farmers are complaining that their cows are eating boards, sticks, etc. You can easily remedy such practices by feeding a mineral to them. The reason they eat boards is because they are starved for a mineral, mainly phosphorus. A mineral should be self fed and a very satisfactory one can be mixed on the farm. A very effective mineral can be mixed using 100 pounds salt 100 pounds bone meal or bone black and 100 pounds limestone or wood ashes. The bone meal and limestone can be obtained at the elevator. If not on hand, three or four days time will secure some. Such a mixture will cost approximately one dollar per hundred lbs

NO MORE 4-H CHAMPIONS?

New Plan Would Put Junior Show-Men Into Three Groups

Several Iowa counties are considering the adoption of a new method of selecting 4-H show winners in the livestock classes, reports J S. Quist, club leader at Iowa State College

Under the new plan all animals deserving a blue ribbon will be ranked in the bue ribbon class, the slightly inferior will be ranked in a red ribbon class and those not good enough for the first two will be ranked in the 3rd group. Owners of animals in each class will share equally in the prize money of other awards for that class.

The advantage of this system of scoring is that it will not take out the competitive element of club work yet it will remove the high premium now placed on first place winners and give all the boys who do good work a chance to win recognition It also will remove the embarrassment of last place since no one will know which calf in the lower group is the "tailender".

Altho no counties have adopted the plan yet, several farm bureaus and county agents plan to discuss the matter with their local fair association boards.

WILLIAM. LAU DIED TUESDAY A. M.

FUNERAL SERVICES THURSDAY AFTERNOON AT 2:00 O'CLOCK

Wm. Lau A Resident Of Hancock County For Many Years

William Lau, who has been a resident of Klemme for the past thirteen years, passed away at his home in Klemme, Tuesday morning at 11:00 o'clock. April 7th, 1931.

Wilhelm Lau, son of Mr. and Mrs. Christ Lau, was born in Clayton County, Iowa, January 19, 1864.

He was baptized in infancy and received his early religious training in the Lutheran Church. Later he was instructed in the M. E. Church and became a member of the Methodist Church at Elkport, Iowa, in June, 1879, at the age of fifteen years.

Mr. Lau came to Hancock County in 1882 and worked on the Fred Greimann farm until h was married to Miss Rike Priebe on February 5th, 1884 The marriage ceremony took place at the Elltown Reformed Church and was officiated by Rev Fred Mosebach, who was pastor of the church at that time.

Mr. and Mrs. Lau then rented a farm near Garner where they lived for five years, when they purchased the home place south of Klemme, now farmed by their son, Emil.

Mr Lau was an active farmer for a period of about 34 years. Mr. and Mrs Lau retired from the farm in October, 1918 when they moved to Klemme, where they have lived since.

Mr Lau, a few years ago, served for a time as marshall and commissioner in Klemme.

Mr. Lau had not been in the best of health for the past year or more About the first of the year he took sick and was forced to remain in his home and in bed part of the time. Sunday his condition became serious and members of the family were called home to be with him. He passed away Tuesday morning, April 7th, 1931. death being caused by dropsy. His age was 67 years. 2 months and 18 days.

Funeral services will be held at the Klemme Reformed Church on Thursday afternoon at 2:00 o'clock and interment will be made in the Klemme Cemetery.

Schubert, Britt; Mrs. Albert Schmidt, Emil Lau, and Mrs Otto Behrends, of Garber, Iowa Two children, a boy and a girl, died in infancy; two sisters, Mrs. Wm. Greimann, Garner. and Mrs. Henry Reusch, of South Haven, Michigan; and one brother, Martin Lau. of Rosemont, Minnesota; and nineteen grandchildren. besides many other relatives survive him.

MUD MAY CAUSE CHICK GRIEF

May Convey Disease and Parasites From Old Yards

During extremely wet weather in the spring when it is impossible to go any place on the farm without accumulating mud on the feet, all poultry raisers should take care that they do not carry mud from the old farmlot into the brooder house when caring for the young chicks.

Often producers wonder why it is that trouble is experienced with diseases and parasites when the chicks are being raised on new ground. Careless methods of caring for the chicks such as the one mentioned, are apt to infest the new plots and defeat the previous precautions.

Another possible source of contamination from old ground arises thru the use of pails having mud stuck on the bottom which is scraped off when they are set down.

Fewer people are leaving the farms now than were a short time ago, federal authorities report.

TO GIVE DORMANT SPRAY DEMONSTRATIONS SOON

H. E. Nichols of the Extension Service of Iowa State College will be in Hancock County Monday and Tuesday, April 13 and 14 to put on two dormant spray demonstrations at the farms of J. J. Urich and C. D. Daniels.

On Monday, April 13 the demonstration will be held at the J. J. Urich farm 3 miles west and 3 miles north of Garner. On Tuesday, it will be held at the C. D. Daniels farm 3½ miles east of Garner along the pavement.

Both places Mr. Nichols will apply a dormant spray to control Oyster Shell Scale.

Three different spray solutions will be used at both places. Fifteen pounds of dry lime sulphur in 50 gallons of water will be tested for results against two oil sprays. The oil sprays will consist of a 6 or 7% solution using Dendrol oil spray supplied thru the courtesy of the Standard Oil Co. and Sunoco Oil spray supplied thru the courtesy of the Sun Oil Co. The oil sprays while little more expensive in most or all cases gives better results and the added expense is more than offset by being nicer and cleaner to apply.

Plan to attend one or both of the demonstrations and remember too, that Mr. Nichols will be more than glad to answer any questions in regard to your orchard. Remember the dates and the places. Monday and Tuesday, April 13 and 14.

OLEOMARGARINE TAX TO BE EFFECTIVE JULY 4TH

Iowa dairymen won a four-year fight when the 44th General Assembly by a practically unanimous vote provided for an inspection fee and a tax of five cents per pound on Oleomargarine sold within the state This law will become effective July 4th.

"This tax on oleomargarine should be a protection to Iowa Dairy men and help to stimulate the price of butter," stated M. G. Thornburg, Secretary of Agricuture. "The inspection fee and tax should also make this industry bear its share of the tax burden of the state, a situation which has not been true in the past on account of the fact that oleomargarine is not manufactured in this state and is made principally of oils which are imported into this country free of charge."

BROODER TEMPERATURES

It has been the experience of people who are operating battery brooers that a temperature of 85 degrees is warm enough for baby chicks.

The usual reccommendation where either coal or oil stoves are used in the brooder houses is to start with a tmperature of 95 degrees. with a thermometer hanging at the edge of the hover about two inches off the floor. This means that when the baby chicks go to bed at night, they are about a foot outside of the edge of the hover, because they will hunt the temperature which they are comfortable.

As they get older, chicks need less heat, and the temperature of the stove shoud be reduced so that the inner edge of the circle of chicks will continue to stay about a foot away from the edge of the hover.

It is not possibe to give definite temperature, because it is necessary that the caretaker watch the chicks and reduce the temperature of the stove so that these chicks don't form the habit of sleeping too far away.

If the temperature is kept too high, the chicks will keep backing up until they get into the corners of the house, and then they will start piling. Once the chicks are either too hot or too cold, you are almost sure to have trouble with crowding with consequent poor feathering, slow growth and often heavy mortality.

Incorrect temperatures are the most likely cause of chicks piling up.

DOINGS AT SCHOOL THE PAST WEEK

REPORT CARDS WILL BE GIVEN OUT NEXT WEEK

Klemme School Will Again Enter In Iowa Academic Meet

This week terminates another six-weeks period and reviews and tests are in order. We hope a good showing may be made Parents will be sent report cards next week and we hope they may give them the attention they deserve.

An order has been placed for tests for each pupil in high school that we may participate in the Iowa Academic Meet. It will be conducted in our own school some time in the early part of May. Students are eager to make good scores and many no doubt. will be reviewing between now and that date with a view to making such.

Our baseball boys have not yet hit their stride. They lost to Thornton last week and this week to Goodell. But the scores were low and with more practice the scores will be different. They play Britt on our home field Friday.

Our livestock class have been observing livestock this spring. Trips have already been made to observe sheep at the John Bock farm, dairy cattle at Mr. Koerner's, and hogs at Ralph Ludeke's farm.

The Senior class play given both Friday and Saturday nights of last week drew a splendid crowd Friday night and a fair one on Saturday evening. Over $150 were taken at the door. It was a very interesting play and won a lot of favorable comments. It was well presented. Raymond Barz, a Senior of last year agreed at a very late date to take the place of Paul Hughes, one of our Juniors who because of business could not go on with the play. Raymond has had lots of experience on the stage and did the part splendidly. Verner Priebe starred in the colored part and proved to be the center of attraction.

Our grade teachers are still busy on the costumes for the grade operetta to be given the last of April or first of May. Perhaps the date can be announced in next week's issue of The Times All will want to see and hear this program.

Those neither absent nor tardy to date in grades 1 and 2 are Fritz Gobeli, Melvin Coobs, Jacqueline Kudje, and Lorraine Buntenbach In grades 3 and 4 Mildred Jean Sitzer.

Gertrude Grosshuesch has returned a card from Dr. Sitzer's office where she has been to have her teeth cared for. Let many others go and do likwise. It is now much more convenient to go to the office of a dentist since we have one so near our door. It pays to go occasionally just to make certain there are no small cavities needing to be filled It costs least to fill them when they are small and further decay is stopped and a tooth is often saved for longer service. None of us want to be left toothless.

The Girls Glee club directed by Miss McGinnis is working diligently on the music they must give at Britt, April 23. At this County Music Festival each school is privileged to present two or three selections of their own and then be represented in the large general chorus of singers from all of the Hancock County high school glee clubs. This program will be well worth hearing

The bids for the Junior Senior banquet have not yet been received They should be in by this coming Friday. W hope it will not be necessary for the class to go out of town for their banquet We dislike to have them do this. We prefer the money to be spent in Klemme where most of it was collected.

Egg prices are expected to be fairly satisfactory next fall.

Suckers on corn plants have been found to be beneficial rather than detrimental, an Illinois scientist reports.

FOREWORD

My primary purpose in writing this story of the American expeditionary forces in France is to render what I conceive to be an important service to my country. In that adventure there are many lessons useful to the American people, should they ever again be called to arms, and I felt it a duty to record them as I saw them.

The World war found us absorbed in the pursuits of peace and quite unconscious of possible threat to our security. We would listen to no warnings of danger. We had made small preparation for defense and none for aggression. So when war actually came upon us we had to change the very habits of our lives and minds to meet its realities. The slow processes by which we achieved these changes and applied our latent power to the problems of combat in Europe, despite our will, our numbers and our wealth, I have endeavored to describe. Therein lie the lessons of which I write.

I wish to dedicate this modest work to the men of all ranks who served with me in France, and especially to those who gave their lives to the cause for which we fought.

To my comrades of the allied armies I wish to say that I am not attempting to write a history of the World war or of the epic part they took in it. I write of our own army and for our own people, and I have not consciously magnified or minimized the effort of any army or any people. There is credit for all of us in the final triumph of our united arms. The struggle of the allies was much longer, their sacrifices very much greater, than ours.

I am grateful to President Wilson and Secretary Baker for selecting me to command our armies and for the whole-hearted and unfailing support they accorded me in France. No commander was ever privileged to lead a finer force; no commander ever derived greater inspiration from the performance of his troops.

JOHN J. PERSHING.

Gen. John J. Pershing.
From painting by Joseph Cummings Chase in Paris, 1918.

CHAPTER I

On May 3, 1917, four weeks after the United States had declared war on Germany, I received the following telegram from my father-in-law, the late Senator F. E. Warren, in Washington:

"Wire me today whether and how much you speak, read and write French."

At this time I was stationed at Fort Sam Houston, which adjoins San Antonio, Texas, and was in command of the southern department with the rank of major general. Naturally, Senator Warren's telegram suggested that I was to be assigned to some duty in France, but as no intimation had been given out regarding the extent of our active participation in the war, the message was somewhat puzzling.

However, I telegraphed the following reply:

"Spent several months in France nineteen-eight studying language. Spoke quite fluently; could read and write well at that time. Can easily reacquire satisfactory working knowledge."

Quotes Warren's Letter.

My reply, to be sure, was rather optimistic, yet it was comparatively accurate and perhaps was justified by the possibilities to be inferred from Senator Warren's telegram. A few days later I received from him the following letter:

"Dear Jack:

"This is what happened: Last night, about ten o'clock, the secretary of war rang me up and wanted to know if I would call in and see him this morning, and I responded that I would if I could reach him at nine o'clock. This is the first time he has ever asked me to call for a consultation.

"When I reached him he said in the most distant and careless way: 'Oh, by the way, before I discuss the matter about which I asked you to call—do you happen to know whether Pershing speaks French? (This is the first time your name was ever mentioned between the secretary of war and me, direct.)

"I said I was not certain about that; that I knew he was a linguist along the lines of Spanish and, to some extent, Japanese, and all of the Philippine dialects (a pardonable exaggeration by one's father-in-law)—that perhaps my wife might know, as she speaks French a little and reads it readily.

"He said: 'Well, it is of no special consequence, only I happened to think of it at this moment.' I replied: 'Well, I'll ask my wife about it today and see whether she knows, and will let you know.' He then said: 'If you don't mind, do so.'

"And then he proceeded to discuss quite fully some appropriation matters on which I intended to go to work upon my arrival at the Capitol.

"I hope you will wire me promptly upon receipt of my telegram so that I may tell the secretary 'what my wife said about it (?).'

"Affectionately,

"F. E. WARREN."

Shortly after the receipt of the private wire and before the above letter reached me, a telegram dated May 2 came from Maj. Gen. Hugh L. Scott, chief of staff, containing the opening words, "For your eye alone," followed by a message in code:

"Under plans under consideration is one which will require among other troops our infantry regiments and one artillery regiment from your department for service in France. If plans are carried out you will be in command. You will be in command of the entire force. Wire me at once designation of the regiments selected by you and their present stations."

I construed this message to mean that these troops were to form a division, which, together with such other troops as might be sent over at once, would be under my command.

Within a day or so after the receipt of Scott's telegram it was intimated to Col. M. H. Barnum, my chief of staff, that we might be called upon for a recommendation, and after consultation with him I selected the Sixteenth, Eighteenth, Twenty-sixth and Twenty-eighth regiments of infantry and the Sixth field artillery. These, together with two other artillery regiments and the necessary auxiliary units, were later organized as our first division.

Surprised by Developments.

I had scarcely given a thought to the possibility of my being selected to be in supreme command of our forces, as afterward developed, although my old friend, Maj. Gen. J. Franklin Bell, had written me that he thought my selection almost certain. After I left the Philippines, in 1913, where he was in command, he and I had kept up an intermittent correspondence in which we freely exchanged confidences on army matters.

In one of his letters early in April, 1917, General Bell spoke of the possibility of our sending an army to France and gave a list of the general officers who might be considered for the supreme command. Discussing the chances for and against each one, he predicted, much to my surprise, that all the others, including himself, would be passed over and that I would be selected.

I was the junior on the list of major generals, hence I could not fully accept General Bell's view, but he was so strongly convinced that he was right that he requested an assignment under my command.

The major generals senior to me at the time were, in order of rank: Leonard Wood, General Bell, Thomas H. Barry, Hugh L. Scott and Tasker H. Bliss.

CHAPTER II

I arrived in Washington May 9 and the next morning called at the office of the chief of staff, Maj. Gen. Hugh L. Scott. He spoke of my assignment, which, as had been my impression from his message of May 2, was to command a division, and told me that it had been made upon his recommendation.

General Scott outlined the general plans in so far as anything definite had been determined. Beginning with February 3, the war college division of the general staff presented a number of recommendations for action in the event of war with the central powers. One was for the enactment of a draft law and others referred to the size of the army to be organized and the necessity for the procurement of equipment and supplies.

Chagrined by Unpreparedness.

March 15, acting under instructions of the chief of staff, the war college division submitted a more detailed scheme for raising an army of 500,000 men. But these were all eleventh-hour suggestions and no definite action was taken on any of them until May 18, when congress passed the law authorizing the increase of military establishment through the application of the draft.

I was really more chagrined than astonished to realize that so little had been done when there were so many things that might have been done long before. It had been apparent to everybody for months that we were likely to be forced into the war and a state of war had actually existed for several weeks, yet scarcely a start had been made to prepare for it. The War department seemed to be suffering from a kind of inertia, for which it was probably not altogether responsible.

But the truth is that the general staff at Washington had never been organized along modern lines, its membership had been recently reduced by congress, and but few of its officers had the experience necessary fully to understand its functions. In this fact we no doubt find the basis of many of the difficulties that arose later in connection with the preparation of our army at home and its shipment and supply abroad.

Praise for Secretary Baker.

My next call was upon the secretary of war, Mr. Newton D. Baker. It was a much younger and considerably smaller man who greeted me than I had expected. He actually looked diminutive as he set behind his desk, doubled up in a rather large office chair, but when he spoke my impression changed immediately. We talked of my recent experience in Mexico and of conditions on the border, which, fortunately, were quieter than they had been for several years.

Mr. Baker referred to my appointment and said that he had given the subject very careful thought and had made the choice solely upon my record. I expressed my deep appreciation of the honor, mentioned the responsibility of the position and said that I hoped he would have no reason to regret his action.

I left Mr. Baker's office with a distinctly favorable impression of the man upon whom, as head of the War department, would rest the burden of preparing for a great war to which the wholly unready nation was now committed.

Still proceeding under the assumption that I was to command only a division in France, my feelings may well be imagined when a few days later, the secretary of war called me in to say that it had been decided by the President to send me abroad as commander in chief, and that I should select my staff accordingly and prepare to sail as soon as possible.

The thought of the responsibilities that this high position carried depressed me for the moment. Here in the face of a great war I had been placed in command of a theoretical army which had yet to be constituted, equipped, trained and sent abroad. Still, there was no doubt in my mind then or at any other time of my ability to do the job, provided the government would furnish men, equipment and supplies.

Harbord Chief of Staff.

Obviously it was advisable to choose my staff as soon as practicable. After studying the records of several officers of my acquaintance and of others who were recommended for the position, I chose Maj. James G Harbord. His efficiency in every grade from the day of his enlistment as a private in the army in January, 1889, was not only of record but was well known to those with whom he had served.

Throughout the war Harbord never hesitated a moment to express his opinion with the utmost frankness, no matter how radically it might differ from my own, nor did he ever fail to carry out instructions faithfully even when they were not in accord with his views. Entirely unselfish, he labored incessantly for what he believed to be the best interests of our armies. His ability, his resourcefulness, his faculty for organization, and, above all, his loyalty, were outstanding qualities, and these, together with a compelling personality, made him invaluable to the nation in this important position.

After consultation with the permanent heads of staff and supply departments, and with no little insistence on my part in more than one instance, the corresponding representatives to accompany me were designated, and they in turn chose their assistants. Although the list did not include all I would have selected, as some were not available, yet all rose to important places in the final organization, except one or two who failed in health.

The total number in my party that sailed on the Baltic was as follows:

Regular army officers	40
Marine corps officers	2
ORC officers in active service	17
Enlisted men	67
Field clerks	36
Civilian clerks	20
Civilian interpreters	5
Civilians (correspondents)	3
Total on Baltic	190

Draft Act Passed May 18.

The method of raising our armies by conscription was based on studies made by the war college under instructions from General Scott. President Wilson recommended the plan to congress April 7, 1917, but the draft act was not passed until May 18, forty-two days after the declaration of war.

Roosevelt Offer Rejected.

The appeal of Col. Theodore Roosevelt at this time for permission to raise a volunteer division aroused popular sentiment throughout the country in his favor, but approval would have opened the door for many other applications and the policy would have interfered materially with the orderly and businesslike application of the draft law.

Moreover, the regular establishment would have suffered from the loss of an undue proportion of the best officers, who inevitably would have been selected for important positions in these special units at a time when their services were urgently needed in building more largely.

Another important reason for disapproving Colonel Roosevelt's application was that in such a war it was necessary that officers, especially those in high command, should be thoroughly trained and disciplined. Furthermore, Colonel Roosevelt was not in the best of health and could not have withstood the hard work and exposure of training camps and trenches.

Provisions for Regular Sessions of Congress

Each congress covers the period from the fourth day of the March following the congressional election in which its members were chosen, to noon the fourth day of March of the second year thereafter, or a period of two years.

According to the Constitution, congress must meet in regular session on the first Monday of December of every year, and special sessions may be held upon the call of the President. The "long session" is the one beginning in the odd-numbered years, because it may continue until business is finished. It usually ends, though, in the early summer. The session beginning in December of the even-numbered years is called the "short session" for the reason that it may last only until March 3, owing to the expiration of the terms of the members.

Lesson for April 12

THE PRODIGAL SON

LESSON TEXT—Luke 15:11-24.

GOLDEN TEXT—Likewise, I say unto you, there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth.

PRIMARY TOPIC—What to Do When We Do Wrong.

JUNIOR TOPIC—What to Do When We Do Wrong.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Father's Welcome to the Wandering Son.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Church and the Repentant Sinner.

The center of interest in this parable is not the prodigal nor his brother, but the "certain man who had two sons." He who fails to see the heart of our Father God will miss the purpose of the story.

I. The Son's Estrangement From the Father (v. 12).

There is every indication that this was a happy home, but a demon entered it and stirred up discontent in the heart of the younger son. He became tired of the restraints of home. His desire for freedom moved him willfully to choose to leave home—to throw off the restraints of a father's rule. Sin is essentially the desire to be free from the restraints of rightful authority and for selfish indulgence. At the request of the son "the father divided unto him his living."

II. The Son's Departure (v. 13).

Having made the fatal decision, he went posthaste to the enjoyment of his cherished vision. He quickly got his goods in portable shape. Having thrown off the restraints of his father's rule, he eagerly withdrew from his father's presence. This is always the way sin works. Adam and Eve after they had sinned hid themselves. The son could not now stand the presence of his father so he hastened away, having "gathered all together."

III. The Son's Degeneration (vv. 13, 14).

He had a good time while his money lasted, but the end came quickly. The indications are that his course was soon run. From plenty in his father's house to destitution in the far country was a short journey. The sinner is soon made to realize the famine when such powers as ministered to his pleasure are burned out.

IV. The Son's Degradation (vv. 15, 16).

Having no friends to help him when his money was all gone, he was driven to hire out to a citizen to feed swine. It was a tragic change from being a son in his father's house to feeding swine in the far country. It is ever so. Those who will not serve God are made slaves to the Devil to do his bidding (Romans 6:16). How vividly this portrays the history of many men and women about us, and yet it is the picture of the inevitable consequences of sin.

V. The Son's Restoration (vv. 17-24).

1. "He came to himself" (v. 17).

Upon reflection he was made conscious that though he had wronged his father and ruined himself, he was still a son of his father. In the days of his sinning he was beside himself. The sinner continues in his sin because he is insane. The world calls the sinner who leaves off his evil ways crazy, but in reality he has just become sane.

2. His resolution (v. 18).

His reflection ripened into resolution. The picture of his home, where even the hired servants had a superabundance, moved him to make a decision to leave the far country and go home.

3. His confession (vv. 18, 19).

He acknowledged that his sin was against heaven and his father, that he had forfeited his right to be called a son, and begged to be given a place as a hired servant. The sinner not only should make a resolution—he should confess his sin.

4. His action (v. 20).

Action was needed. Resolution will not avail unless accompanied with action. When the confession is genuine, action will follow. Good intentions will not avail.

5. His reception by his father (vv. 20-24).

The father had not forgotten his son. His unchanging love followed the son all the time he was away, and longed for his return. He must often have looked for him, for he saw him when he was a great way off. So anxious was he for him that he ran to meet him and fell upon his neck and kissed him. So glad was the father that he did not even hear his confession through, but ordered the tokens of honor to be placed upon him, receiving him back into a son's position.

TALES... of the TRIBES

By EDITHA L. WATSON

The Zuni

In that shadowy past which is so ...g ago that only legend reminds us that it was at all, an Indian people came from the northward and settled in the Zuni valley. Later, from the West came another people, and these joined the first settlers. This was the beginning of the Zuni tribe, which is one of the most interesting tribes of the Pueblos.

Zuni.

At the dawn of their recorded history, they were living in seven cities, which were known as far south as Mexico. Perhaps ...dian traders, journeying to far ...aces with the products of their vil...ges to exchange for the shells of ...e coast or the parrot feathers of ...e South, told of their seven cities, ...d, as has always been the custom ...travelers, exaggerated a little. At ...y rate, these vague rumors reached ...e ears of Fray Marcos de Niza, who ...ade his famous exploration trip in ...39. He listened to all that the In...ans along the way could tell him ...out "Cibola" (Zuni), and finally saw ...ne of the villages from a neighbor...g hill, but instead of entering the ...ttlement, where he might have been ...isabused of his notions, he returned ... Mexico with a great narrative of ...e magnificent "Kingdom of Cibola." ...he Indians along the way had as...ured him that this was a wealthy ...ountry, and that its seven cities were ...lled with gold and precious stones. ...ence, Coronado, the next year started North to explore this unknown land ...f which so many glowing tales were ...old.

The Pueblos had a way of sending ...essages by fleet runners, whose ...peed and endurance were the wonder ...f the Spaniards. News reached the ...rst Zuni city (Hawikuh), of the com...ng of these strangers from the South, ...nd of their warlike tendencies, and ...pon its receipt the Zunians became ...ctive, with the result that after ...torming the town, the Spaniards ...ound that women and children, and ...ost of the movables in the place, had ...een taken away. The mesa strong...old of Taaiyalone (Corn Mountain ...r Thunder Mountain, as it is vari...usly known), which commands the ...Zuni country, was their refuge, and ...he warriors who had defended Hawi...uh fled there also, leaving a deserted ...nd empty pueblo to the disappointed ...invaders.

Coronado found that the "Kingdom of Cibola" was a small country containing seven pueblos, all within four leagues, the largest of which contained 500 houses, and that the immense treasure of rumor was a sorry myth. In fact, he wrote that Fray Marcos had "said the truth in nothing that he reported."

Zuni at this time must have been at its zenith. There are no records of more than the seven pueblos, and history shows that these dropped into oblivion one by one, until six of them have become uninhabited ruins.

Forty years after Coronado's disappointment, Chamuscado visited the tribe, and in 1583 Espejo went to Zuni. He reported that he found there some of the Mexican Indians who had been with Coronado, and that there were but six cities, so that evidently one had been abandoned since Coronado's time.

Three Spanish priests established a mission at Hawikuh in 1629, and this was the first mission in the "province of Cibola," although one had been attempted previously. In 1632 the Indians killed two priests, one who had been sent to them, and one who was passing through Hawikuh on his way to another tribe. Fearful of consequences, the Zuni again fled to Taaiyalone, their refuge in all troubles, and lived there for three years.

In 1670, an enemy tribe raided the village of Hawikuh, burned the church and killed the missionary. This town was probably not reoccupied after the raid, and by the time of the Pueblo rebellion of 1680, the Zuni were living in three towns, two others beside Hawikuh having been deserted.

The rebellion of 1680 was participated in by almost all the Pueblos, the day being set and plans made, and the news spread by runners. The Zuni were as active as the rest, and after killing the missionary who remained among them, they once more hurried to Taaiyalone, and made it their home for twelve years, until Diego de Vargas reconquered the country in 1692.

After this, Zuni was one city. It was rebuilt on the ruins of Halona, on the Zuni river, one of the original Seven Cities of Cibola.

Even yet, there was unrest among them. Once more a missionary was killed, and once more the mesa stronghold was their refuge. However, peace was finally concluded, and from 1713 on there was not much to record in the history of Zuni. For some time it was entirely abandoned by the white people, and became a thoroughly Indian town again, but in later years the United States government established a school and built extensive irrigation works, so that the Indians began to become educated in the white man's ways of peace.

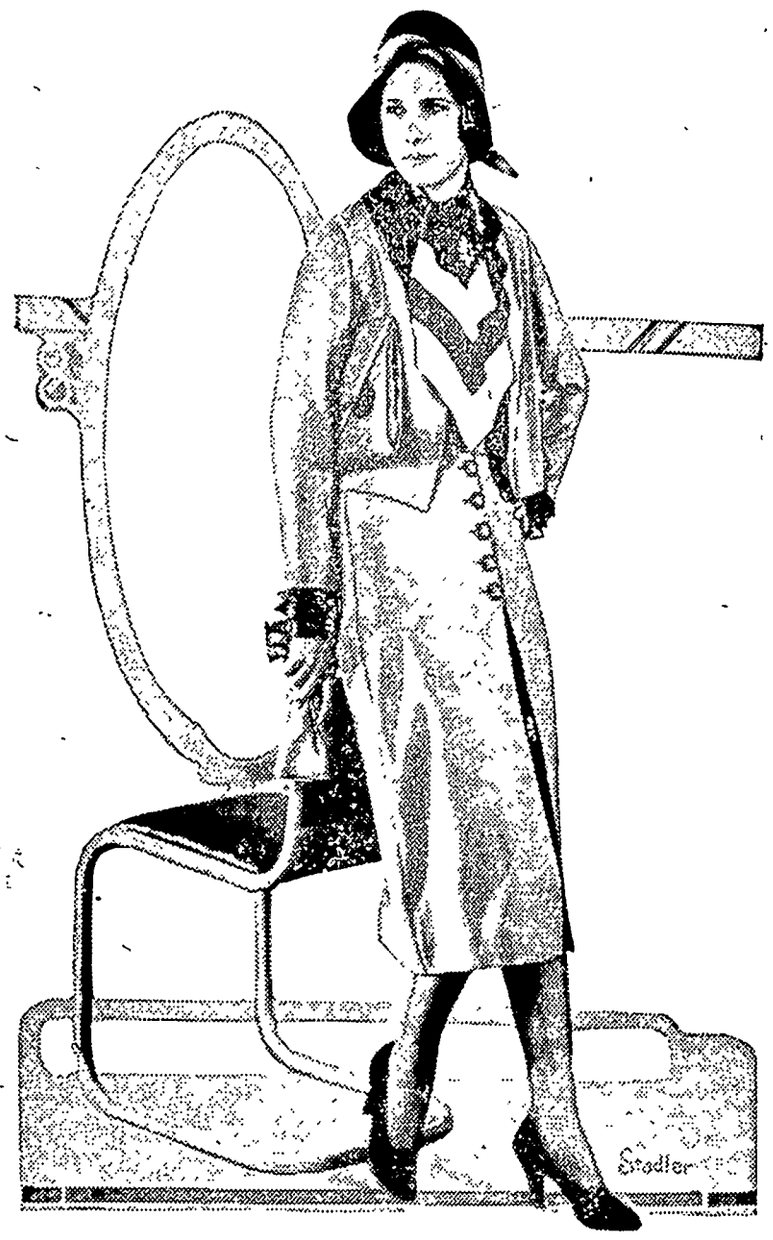
WEEK-END ENSEMBLE WHOLE WARDROBE WITHIN ITSELF

BRAVO! The applause of the fashionable world is due the genius who created the multi-piece ensemble such as the young woman in the picture is wearing. The miracle of it is that this stunning suit is an entire wardrobe in itself, at least so far as practical daytime apparel is concerned. It embodies economy, efficiency, swank and attractiveness all in one—a triumph indeed in sartorial accomplishment.

En route for a week-end visit, the college girl travels in the costume exactly as you see it in the picture. Arriving at her destination, she removes both the little short jacket which is lined with the print and the wrap-around skirt which buttons so smartly in the front, the two made of smart wool material in a fashionable beige tone. Off also comes her "classy" scarf which highspots the costume with a loud splash of color. Having thus done, this young modernist presents herself in a fresh navy blue print frock patterned with daisies and bright green stems as worn underneath jacket and skirt. Yes, indeed, this sure is a day and age of efficiency.



FOR THE WEEK-END VISIT

The color scheme of this outfit is perfect. The green of the print is accentuated by the several stripes in the scarf end, which carry out a three-color combination to tally with the general theme, that of brown, green and blue, not forgetting the white daisies in the print. A bakou hat of brown with green and blue velvet ribbon, tied smartly in the back in a bow, completes this ensemble.

Which reminds us, there is no more popular trimming in the whole category of decorative themes for spring and summer than velvet ribbon. This is so, not only from the viewpoint of the milliner but the dressmaker seldom turns out a frock of flowery print without tying a bit of colorful velvet ribbon about the waist or posing a bow or so to best advantage at strategic points on the frock. The same may be said of the lace frock, which is so vastly popular today, there's almost sure to be a highlight of velvet somewhere about it.

In trimming milady's chapeau torsades of velvet are made as variegated as a barber's pole by twisting or braiding velvet strips of ribbons of various colors together.

Again, the Pajama.

If ever a mode is "having its fling" that mode is the pajama mode. Once a novelty, limited to certain environments, pajama costumes are now accepted by the best of society in places where you would never dream of them going in the conservative days of yore.

And now that pajamas have gained their freedom and are no longer restricted to beach and boudoir, they are "venturing" into realms of dining and dancing, making a gesture toward utmost formality when occasion demands. Even the stay-at-homes under the guise of hostess pajamas, are playing a more or less formal role.

Which all goes to show that you will be right in fashion if you go pajama-clad to afternoon tea or dinner in the evening or, when as hostess, you are doing the honors at home. Of course as a true follower of fashion one must be very certain as to which pajamas are which, for there is as fine a line of distinction drawn between pajamas and pajamas as frocks for sports, for afternoon or for evening wear at various ultra formal affairs.

The hostess, for instance, will be quite proper in a costume with trousers that wide they scarce can be distinguished from a flaring skirt. It may have a jacket long or short, which is entirely a matter of taste. The material depends upon the formality of the occasion, even unto the point of utmost luxury.

MODISH PAJAMA COSTUMES

Speaking of lovely materials, the hostess pajama costume to the left in the picture is fashioned of exquisite white panne velvet; the long monogramed scarf shows a turquoise lining, the reverse end hanging down the back, giving a high note of color.

To the right in the picture Mary Astor, a featured radio pictures player, is posing in a hostess pajama costume of an entirely different character to that of the companion model just described. The trousers and bodice are of red printed crepe, with a coat and tle of the crepe in monotone tomato red.

POULTRY

CAPONS USUALLY HIGHER PRICED

Operation Is Favored When Cockerels Cannot Be Sold.

The production of capons is a good practice for poultry flock owners, according to Oliver N. Summers, extension poultryman of the University of Wyoming, as capons usually bring higher prices than other classes of poultry.

Surplus cockerels should be caponized (1) when cockerels cannot be sold to good advantage as broilers, (2) when a supply of fresh killed chicken is desired later, (3) cockerels are sometimes caponized when natural means are used for brooding because most capons (Leghorns and such excepted) will brood chickens as well as a hen.

The unsexing of cockerels is simple and easy and losses in slips and birds that may be killed should be very small, 2 to 5 per cent, though, of course, this depends upon conditions such as light, age, whether or not the cockerels have been starved before the operation, the experience of the operator, etc.

Though the increases in size or weight of a capon over a cockerel is considerable it is not as great as is sometimes claimed and considered, it being about one-fifth. However, this increased weight is made on less feed as the disposition of a capon is quiet and docile while that of a cockerel is aggressive and quarrelsome. Because the market prefers larger capons and top prices are paid for capons weighing 7 pounds or more, the larger breeds and varieties are most desirable. However, because the Asiatics and Giants are slow growing and late developing, birds belonging to the medium classes as the Plymouth Rocks, Rhode Island Reds and Wyandottes make the best capons. Because of their smaller size it usually does not pay to caponize Leghorns or cockerels of the lighter breeds.

Because the best market and demand for capons comes between Christmas and Easter and because it takes about 10 months to grow and finish a capon properly, cockerels should be caponized in June, July and August.

Ofter information as to the time to caponize cockerels is given according to age or size, but it is more desirable that the stage of development be taken into consideration because some cockerels develop much faster than others of the same lot. Because of the limited time and space they cannot be given here, but details as to instruments, the operation, care and feeding of capons, etc., may be obtained from Farmer's Bulletin 849, "Capons and Caponizing," which may be obtained from the County Agricultural Agent or the Extension Service of the College of Agriculture of the University of Wyoming.

Ancestors Fix Pullets' Worth in Laying Flock

A baby chick is born with a certain capacity to lay eggs, reminds Prof. L. M. Hurd of the New York State College of Agriculture, in advising chick buyers to buy chicks only from heavy laying flocks. It is doubtful, he says, if any practice in flock management is as effective as breeding in increasing or maintaining flock profits.

He cites the records of two flocks at the Cornell university experiment station. One flock comes from hens whose ancestors for many generations have laid a small number of eggs, which last year laid 136 eggs worth $3.90. The other flock comes from hens whose ancestors were selected for generations because they were the best layers; this flock laid, on the average, 219 eggs worth $6.94.

Both flocks were of the same age and were grown and handled the same way but the difference due to breeding was $3.04 worth of eggs for each hen. One recommendation of the college is to buy chicks from disease-free and high-egg-laying strains. Other recommendations and suggestions for growing better pullets are available from your county agricultural agent or from the poultry department at the College of Agriculture at Ithaca.

Confine Male Birds

What kind of eggs are you going to take to market this summer? You can do a lot to keep up the summer demand for eggs by the care you give them on the farm. Be sure the hens have plenty of clean, airy nests, well-filled with litter. One nest for every five or six hens is sufficient. Gather the eggs twice a day. Shut up the broody hens every night. Shut up or sell male birds. Infertile eggs cannot spoil. Store the eggs in a cool cellar if possible.

Mites Cut Output

Get after the red mites in the henhouse before they cause a drop in egg production. Before the poultry mites become too numerous is the time to treat the roosts and other parts of the house.

Hot weather is most favorable to the reproduction of the mites and they multiply very rapidly, soon causing a falling off in egg production. These mites are much more harmful than the lice which live on the body of the hen all the time.

(Publish April 8-15-22.)

THE CAUSE OF DROUGHTS

The year 1930 was exceedingly dry and abnormally warm. Iowa had an average total rainfall of 26.1 inches which is 81% of normal, according to figures that have been tabulated by the Weather and Crop Bureau of the Iowa Department of Agriculture. In commenting on the cause of droughts, J. B. Kincer, Chief of the Division of Agricultural Meteorology of the U. S. Weather Bureau, states:

"Rain is produced by a considerable cooling of a great volume of humid air. The amount of moisture the air can contain in the invisible, gaseous form decreases rapidly with a decrease in temperature. Air may be cooled in a number of ways, but the only method of effectively cooling a quantity necessary to produce appreciable rain is by expansion due to increase in height. Such ascent of air may be caused by local heating near the earth's surface, frequently resulting in summer thunderstorms, or by counter circulation in cyclones and anti-cyclones, which bring more general rain. The more extensive ascents are brought about by the running of warmer, moist air usually from a southerly direction, up over cooler air in its path.

"During the drought of 1930, atmospheric pressure persisted relatively high in more southern, especially southeastern, sections and low, with high temperatures, over the northern United States and southern Canada. As air moves clockwise from and around a region of relatively high pressure in the Northern Hemisphere, this general stagnant condition caused a nearly continuous flow of descending, hence, dry air from south to north over the surface of the central and eastern United States. Furthermore, temperatures were high in the north frequently exceeding those in the South and, consequently, this flow was without contact with denser air of lower temperature, and without the cooling necessary to produce rainfall: In other words, the normal movement of 'highs' and 'lows' was interrupted by a persistently stagnant state of the atmosphere.

"Conditions attending droughts are well known to meteorologists, but just why these should establish themselves and persist as in 1930, has not, as yet, been determined.

ORCHARD SPRAYING

Farmers and frult growers of Hancock County may receive information regarding the timely application of the various orchard sprays during the coming year as a result of arrangements made by the Farm Bureau with the Agricultural Extension Service of Iowa State College. Cards briefly describing the necessary sprays and telling when to apply them for best results will be sent out from the farm bureau free of charge to anyone desiring this service.

County Agent Weiss says that it will soon be time to apply the dormant spray, if one is needed. This dormant spray is needed. he explains, only where scale insects are present on the trees. Otherwise, it is a waste of time and money to spray before growth starts. There are several of these scale insects that affect apple trees, the most common being the oyster shell scale This pest is much more common in the northern part of Iowa but is found in many orchards in the south half of this state The San Jose scale is found only in a few Counties along the Mississippi river from Scott County south.

These scale insects, County Agent Weiss says, are tiny lice that suck the sap from the trees, killing many limbs and greatly reducing the crop. Only a dormant spray will kill them. The best time to appy this spray is just before the new growth starts in the spring or about April 15th. Liquid lime sulphur diluted one gallon to eight of water is effective. Dry lime sulphur, 15 pounds dissolved in 50 gallons of water will also control the scale. There are also various dormant spraying oils in the market that are as good if not better than lime sulphur in controlling scale on apple trees. They are a little more expensive but much nicer to apply, than dormant strength lime sulphur. It requires a 6 per cent oil spray to control oyster shell scale, while a 2 percent will control the San Jose scale. It is essential to be thorough in applying this spray as the spray must come in contact with each scale to kill it.

County Agent Weiss will be glad to advise any one in regard to their orchard spraying problems.

BUS COMPETITION HITS RAILROADS

Bankers Association President Asks If Unfair Aid Is Given Motorized Transport—For Rail Mergers.

NEW YORK.—Fair treatment for the railroads in respect to highway motor competition was called for by Rome C. Stephenson, President American Bankers Association, in a recent address here. He also strongly endorsed "sound economic railway consolidation" and praised President Hoover for his initiative in this respect.

"I am very strongly of the opinion that one of the measures which would help materially to put back business where it ought to be is the Eastern four-system plan of railroad consolidation as announced recently following negotiations instituted by President Hoover," said Mr. Stephenson. "Its adoption by the Interstate Commerce Commission would tend to stabilize the transportation industry, facilitate operation and exert a favorable influence on business in general.

"It is a fact well known to business leaders that our railroads are now facing a crisis. Not only do they need protective laws to meet competitive situations arising from increased use of our highways and waterways by other carriers, but they need unification such as the proposed four-system plan provides. Our President has acted wisely in assuming a leadership in this respect and his move deserves the support of every clear-thinking citizen."

Mr. Stephenson declared that the railroads have served this country "so superlatively well that we are prone in our public affairs to overlook our dependence upon them and our obligations to them. The past, present and future progress of the United States is inseparably bound up with their welfare. In neglecting just consideration for them we are even more neglectful of the public's best economic interests.

A Question of Public Interest

"We are confronted with the question as to how much more the public economic interest will stand an invasion of the welfare of the railroads by forces and difficulties not of their own creating and not within the scope of their own unaided powers to combat," said Mr. Stephenson. "I refer especially to new competitions that are undermining the hard-earned position of the railroads, not only with the aid of natural economic forces but also through the aid of government policies which, positively or negatively, tend to give these competitors undue advantages over the railroads.

"It goes without saying that the railroads have no right, nor claim any, so far as I have been able to discern, to complain at legitimate competition in the field of transportation, for the public is entitled to the best possible transportation at the lowest practical cost. But equally does it go without saying that this cannot be fairly brought about by using, or by failing to use, the taxing powers of government to enable competitive methods of transportation to do things they could not otherwise do as unaided private enterprises, particularly when such action impairs the invested rights held in good faith by great masses of our people in established enterprises that are serving the public well."

Mr. Stephenson said it was not his purpose to argue against such competitive transportation as the highway passenger motorbus and motor truck as such, when conducted under proper conditions and in keeping with public welfare and benefit. He declared, however, there is need for serious consideration whether such competition is being developed under conditions that are unfair to the railroads, because either the outright or obscure aid of government policy is the deciding economic factor in that competition.

Would Investigate Bus Traffic

Railroad rights of way, he declared, represent tremendous capital investments, on which the railroads have also heavy current costs to meet. "They pay every day a million dollars in taxes and most of this is on their rights of way," he said. "Also they spend daily over two million dollars additional for the proper maintenance of way." He asserted that the motorbuses have not had to pay for their rights of way in any sense that the railroads paid for theirs.

"They have simply taken possession of public highways built by public funds, both state and national," he continued, "and they have extensively made those highways vastly less comfortable, less safe and less serviceable for private motorists and others who are contributing chiefly to their creation and maintenance."

Mr. Stephenson declared that all these matters should be thoroughly inquired into by competent public bodies, both state and national, with a view of determining the equities and basic public economic interests involved, "particularly in respect to their effects upon the nation's railroads.

"I venture to say," he added, "that such inquiries would show whether it is to the public interest to let things remain as they are, whether the situation calls for a new basis of motorbus and truck taxes to satisfy the equities of the case or whether it would call for such drastic action as the exclusion of this traffic from our public general highways, and the requirement that, even as the railways, it provide as a part of its own private capital investment its own rights of way and for its own maintenance of way out of operating income."

Bit of Greece in France

Antibes, like all the other places along the fascinating French Riviera, has had a romantic history, says a writer in the Detroit News. It was founded more than 2,000 years ago by descendants of the Greek colonists who had built a thriving city on the site of Marseilles. Legend says that among these first settlers were some men and women who had come from Greece and that they chose Antibes as a place to build because the scenery there reminded them so much of Greece. Phenicians and Carthaginians, Romans and Gauls, Germans and Italians and French—they have all met on this coast in the centuries that have passed since, but Antibes has managed more than any other town in France to retain its Greek appearance.

University's Art Treasure

A full-size copy of Murillo's "Immaculate Conception" in mosaics is in the chapel of the Catholic university at Washington, a gift from Pope Pius XI. Three artists labored nearly four years in the Vatican mosaic studio to piece together nearly 800,000 bits of colored glass and of other mineral compounds which form the finished picture, the original of which is preserved in the Prado at Madrid. The mosaic is 9½ feet long and 6 feet wide. Without a frame, it weighs 6,600 pounds. The pieces are of 20,000 different tints and shades.

"Con Men" in Detroit Begin Career Early

Detroit.—Two eight-year-old "confidence men"—neither of whom was distinguished by the slicker's mustache prevalent among such gentry—are being sought by police for bringing confusion to the birthday party of Robert Wellman, seven, and a lesson in sleight of hand to Jamie Allen, four.

As a result of the trickery the eight-year-olds have $1, good for exchange at any confectionery; Robert is shy one birthday present, and Jamie sits home brooding over a marble containing one apparent and derogatory nick.

To trace the legend of "the deal" to its beginnings, one must start with the illness of Jamie's baby sister. As a result, his mother, Mrs. J. S. Allen, was confined to their home and was unable to purchase a birthday offering. Since no child feels comfortable at a party unless he can present his host with a token of esteem, Jamie was given a dollar bill which had been placed in an envelope.

Jamie, glistening in holiday splendor, put out for the Wellman home a few doors away. In front of his home he was intercepted by two older youngsters, one of whom was described as "a smooth talker" with an eye as cold and glistening as the marble in his pocket. Their purported conversation went in the following vein:

"Dressed up," declared the discerning "con man." "You must be going some place."

"A birthday party," confided the affable Mr. Allen.

"So! So!" stated the owner of the marble. "Then you must have a present."

"Quite right, my friend," Mr. Allen declared, "and what a present. Look."

At sight of the dollar the conversational member of the confidence team brightened.

"A dollar," he sneered. "Probably full of germs. Whoever heard of such a present. Tsk! Tsk! Now for one caught in your predicament I have an immediate remedy, guaranteed to cure all colds, coughs and ailments kindred to the human race—"

His accomplice nudged him and whispered, "The wrong spiel."

"So! So!" continued the monologist. "Now right in my pocket reposes the cure for any embarrassment which might arise—"

And before the young Mr. Allen was sure what so many words were about, the dollar had been transferred to the owner of the marble. Mr. Allen went on his way juggling the marble.

Later came the shock. The young Mr. Wellman was already the possessor of a marble, one entirely intact, the young guest learned.

A few minutes later Mrs. Allen observed the scion of the family, seated on the front steps, brooding.

Police were invited by Jamie's parents to aid in the search for confidence men.

Famines

While famines are less frequent today because rapid transportation moves food when needed, millions have died from hunger in other times. Nine million Chinese perished in 1877, and over a million more in 1902. Eight hundred thousand died in India in 1837, over a million in 1865, and almost as many in 1900. Floods, injurious pests, lack of rain, and war were responsible.

Stratton's Boy

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

I was over at Stratton's town making a speech or doing some other ineffective thing when I had a call from Stratton, whom I had known slightly years ago, asking me if I would not come out to his business plant and see him. He had a boy about whom he wanted to talk to me.

Stratton has had a dramatic and an erratic career. He started business thirty years or so ago on nothing, has made more than one sizable fortune and has as many times been on the rocks. Just now he looks prosperous and is running a business valued at eight figures at least, though how much of it is paid for it would be difficult to say. He lives extravagantly and is said to have a wife and daughters with social ambitions and with ability and willingness to spend whatever Stratton makes.

I had heard something of the boy, too. He had been to a half dozen secondary schools from some of which he had withdrawn voluntarily because the management was not to his liking, and from others he had severed his connection at the urgent request of the authorities in charge.

"He wants to go to college," Stratton confided to me, "but I haven't the least idea what he will do when he gets there. He's never worked in high school, and I'm afraid he won't when he gets to college."

"There isn't much chance," I said, not very encouragingly.

"I'm going to be frank with you," Stratton went on. "His habits are bad. He runs around with a wild lot of young people, and he comes home at two or three in the morning hardly able to stagger upstairs. The stuff they drink now is awful, you know that. I talked to him pretty rough the other night. It's really the first time in his life that I've given him a straight-from-the-shoulder talk. I think maybe it will do him good."

The boy was nineteen, and had been going a pretty rapid pace for years, and yet this was the first time that the father had had any serious talk with him. It seemed pretty late to me to begin.

Chemists Seeking Future Uses for Coal

Washington.—Despite widespread use of water power, petroleum and other sources of energy, coal will remain the major source of steam and steam-electric power.

Such is the conclusion of H. M. Hoar, author of a study issued by the Department of Commerce. His findings are based on technological processes of control which have taken place in recent years.

The fact that the coal industry as a whole is in a depressed condition is laid by Hoar to the fact that the fuel has been utilized more efficiently by new processes, that other sources of power are coming into broad use, and that foreign nations are now making efforts to produce enough coal to meet their own demands.

"Technology of the utilization of coal," Hoar declared, "has advanced more rapidly in the last few years than at any time in its history. Lignite is utilized for steam raising purposes; gas is made from coal or from oil; and in Germany motor fuels have been recently obtained from the distillates of coal."

These new developments, Hoar points out, have resulted in large savings to coal consuming industries.

"The electric utilities, for example, have been enabled to reduce the amount of coal necessary to develop a kilowatt hour from 3.2 pounds in 1919, to 1.76 pounds in 1928, a reduction of nearly 45 per cent," he explains. "The railroads, which absorb about a quarter of the total fuel consumption in the United States, and the iron and steel industry have been effecting similar savings."

While a large amount of coal will continue to be employed in the generation of heat and power, Hoar declares, an increasing part of its value in the future will be found in its chemical properties. Already one-fifth of the annual output of bituminous coal in this country is being subjected to chemical processing.

No Births or Deaths for Town During 1930

Its population in 1929 was 123 and during 1930 there was not a single birth, death or marriage.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By WALTER TRUMBULL

Charles Hanson Towne and Gene Tunney, during the cold spell we had before the latter went to Europe, were walking from the hotel where Tunney was staying, in the direction of dinner, at one of the smarter Park avenue restaurants. Through the dusk ahead of them trudged a man to whom they paid no attention until he suddenly staggered and plunged forward on his face. That is not exactly accurate, because he didn't plunge, but seemed rather to fold up gently and then spread himself upon a sidewalk grating. Towne and Tunney didn't know whether he was drunk, drugged, hurt or ill, but, when they stooped above him, there was no scent of liquor and, if his clothes were old, they were neat. He was pale and seemed to be in a faint. When Tunney lifted him, with the strong muscles of the athlete he still is, Gene was surprised to find how light he was. He carried the man into the foyer of an apartment house and Charlie Towne sent a hallboy for a near-by doctor, who came at once. He looked the man over. "Just a case of malnutrition," he said. "This fellow has been starving." He gave him some sort of stimulant.

As the man's eyes opened, the first thing he saw was a stranger, who happened to be bending over him stuffing ten dollars in a pocket which appeared to have been empty for some time. He couldn't have known where he was, or how he got there; but he did know that face.

"When did you eat last?" demanded the stranger.

"Oh, I don't know," said the man weakly, "three or four days ago. But aren't you Gene Tunney?" And the interest of finding himself talking to a heavyweight champion, even a retired one, seemed to rejuvenate the man more than any measure taken by the doctor. Mr. Towne and Mr. Tunney wished to send him to a hospital, but he insisted that he felt a lot better and that all he needed was a little food. So they saw that he got that, and then went along to their dinner.

But, before they parted from the man, there was something that Tunney wished to know. I might say that he has one of the keenest pair of blue eyes I ever saw in stock. Not much gets past them.

"When you fell,"—he said, "your right hand relaxed, and something slipped from it and dropped through the sidewalk grating. Do you mind telling us what it was?"

"Why, no," said the man, a bit hesitantly. "It was a rosary. You see, I've been out of work for quite a while, and—"

They saw. A fellow of thirty; pretty hungry; a little desperate at failing to find a job; a bit of prayer might help; it couldn't do any harm. Well, sometimes prayer seems to be answered, although not often in the shape of a pugilist and a poet. Anyhow, I think the man may get his job.

Odd Reason for Haste to Finish That Letter

He was an old man from the country and, seeing his first typewriter in an office in the live stock exchange at Kansas City, he was entranced when Gladys Wilson, pleasant young employee in the place, volunteered to write a letter for him on the machine if he would dictate to her. He started at a regular, measured pace but, as the end of the page approached, raced to a fast a finish that Miss Wilson barely could keep up with him. "Whew!" she said, breathing hard as she delivered the completed manuscript to him. "What was the grand rush at the end?" "I had to hurry before that contraption ran off the page," he answered simply.

Lose Fat Safely and Quickly

Kruschen Salts—(a perfect combination of the six mineral salts your body should have to function properly) purify your blood of harmful acids, and aid the kidneys and bowels to throw off waste matter—the continual formation of which is probably the cause of your fat.

In this modern age of living, it is impossible to get these salts from the fancy foods you eat—but don't worry just as long as you take Kruschen Salts.

Take a half teaspoon every morning before breakfast in a glass of hot water—little by little that hated fat disappears, you'll feel better than ever before—years younger, full of energy. You'll soon possess that enviable beauty, clear skin, sparkling eyes, superb figure which only perfect health can impart.

An 85c bottle (lasts 4 weeks) at any progressive druggist in America. Money back if Kruschen doesn't convince you that it is the safest, quickest, easiest way to lose fat.

A Hartford woman writes, "I tell the world Kruschen Salts is wonderful stuff to reduce." An Ohio woman lost 10 pounds with one bottle.—Adv.

AROUND THE COUNTY WITH AGENT WEISS

EXTERMINATING WEEDS NEXT FARMER PROBLEM

County Agent Gives Valuable Tips On Weed Eradication

With most of the small grain in and the plowing well under way or done, farmers should be turning their attention toward the weed problem in Hancock County.

You have four kinds of weeds that need attention, namely; Annuals, which complete their growth in one year dying in the fall; Winter annuals ,which include a small group which are similar to winter wheat and rye. The seeds usually germinate in the fall and plants complete their growth in the spring. An example of winter auuual is marsh cress and pepper grass; Biennials. weeds that complete one growth in two seasons, behaving in the same manner as red clover and sweet clover. Examples are Bull Thistle, Burdock and Wild Barley; Perennials, weeds which produce roots, rooting stems or rootstocks which remain alive for many years In addition to the rooting, seed production is usually abundant.

Of the kinds of weeds mentioned probably the annuals are our biggest problem, not because they are the most dangerous to the crop but because we do not pay as strict attention to them as we do such weed as Canada Thistle, Quack and Bindweed which fall in the perennial class. Without a doubt the annuals cause a larger yearly damage than any of the other classes.

All of us are interested in weed control and there are certain fundamental principles involved which if followed carefully. will greatly aid in the success of a weed eradication program. The principles are as follows:

1. Sowe clean seed of strong vitality
2. Prevent weed seed production.
3. Do not plow land covered with weeds having mature seeds until the weeds have been burned.
4. Encourage germination of weed seeds and kill them in the seedling stage.
5. Destroy rootstocks of perennials wherever possible.
6. Prevent storage of organic food reserves in the roots of perennials
7. Maintain or increase soil fertility
8. Develop community cooperation by Education.

Good farming which automatically includes a good three or four year rotation is almost essential in a weed eradication program. Pasturing with sheep, cattle and hogs is an important part of a rotation system and they will prevent spread ing of the creeping Jennie wild mor ning glory, sow thistle and quack grass.

In small patches of thistle, quack and sow thistle in meadows, pastures. along roadsides or in fence lines spraying with chlorates is probably the most efficient method of control. Last year many farmers in the county used Sodium Chlorate with very good results. When the spraying was done as it should have been and more than one spraying was applied excellent results were secured.

I should like very much to hear from you if you are interested in the use of chlorates and whether you care to purchase some this coming season. If the orders are pooled the chlorate can be purchased for about ten cents per pound and this year if enough wish to purchase some, the price, I am sure, will be even less.

Send in your orders now so that we can help you save some money. Remember this, that the Farm Bureau is not handling cholorates but is cooperating with your druggist or elevator man to help you obtain the weed killer a the lowest price possible.

"TRADER HORN" COMING TO CECIL AT MASON CITY

The management of the Cecil Theatre. Mason City, takes pleasure in presenting 6 days. starting Saturday. April 18 "Trader Horn," sensational filmization of the famous novel of African adventure. It is considered one of the most stupendous in the history of talking motion pictures and has rightly been called the picture of a thousand thrills. You will see the breathtaking escape from the savage Isorgi—the river Crocodile along which the adventurers navigate, the meeting with Nina, cruel white goddess of a nation of blacks; the battle with lions of the jungle—these are scenes that you will never forget. It is without duobt the greatest talking drama of all time and tells the most interesting and romantic story against the background of a savage African life. It was 2 years in the making, and it is something that has never been brought to the screen before

The manager of the Cecil theatre is playing the picture at regular prices, in spite of the fact that it is playing at all the larger cities at advance prices

"Trader Horn" engagement at the Cecil Theatre is one of the important events of the current season and should not be missed. adv

SUDAN IS GOOD PASTURE CROP

Will Provide Abundance of Feed at Time Bluegrass Fails

Sudan grass is Iowa's most valuable forage crop to supply a large amount of good pasture in midsummer, says H. D. Hughes, head of the Farm Crops Department at Iowa State College. His statement is based on comparison of a large number forages over a period of years at the Iowa- Agricultural Experiment Station.

Sudan is not recommended for all-season pasture as it is not advisable to plant it until the ground is well warmed up and it dies as soon as frost comes. To keep stock growing and still producing, however, when hot dry, weather brings bluegrass to a standstill, sudan is the best crop.

Supplementary pasture will be needed this summer, Hughes says, because the average Iowa bluegrass pasture will be less productive than usual as a result of the damage of last summer's drouth. An increasing number of farmers, however, are seeding supplementary pasture crop as a regular part of their cropping program This practice not only keeps the regular bluegrass stronger and more productive, but also saves feed by keeping stock growing and thrifty.

Sudan is one of the surest crops that can be planted as well as one of the least costly. Seed is abundant and cheap. It can be seeded on any soil altho. for a large yield per acre the more fertile the soil the better. Seed is broadcast at the rae of 15 to 20 pounds per acre and covered by thoro harrowing The crop should not be planted until after the corn is in It will be ready for pasture about July 1

While sudan grass has been used very successfully as a pasture for hogs, rape. is undoubtedly more desirable for this class of livestock. Rape is another sure crop that can be seeded at a relatively low cost. It can be seeded any time from early spring until as late as mid-summer.

When broadcast, 5 to 6 pounds of seed seed per acre is recommended Young pigs can be turned into rape when the plants are 6 to 8 inch es high, but the largest returns may be expected when pasturing is delayed until the plants are about a foot high and close grazing avoided thruout the season. Rape can be pastured thruout the late fall until the ground is frozen hard.

Alho we have had a mild winter. there seems to be considerable winter injury to red rasberries and black-berries. Therefore pruning should be delayed until the buds have started in order to determine just how far the wood has been killed back.

CURBING THE CIGARETTE EVIL

Sac Sun: Here's a new wrinkle and one that proves quite successful because its being done in the name of moral crusading. A man rather peculiarly dressed, stops at a farm-house and says he is traveling in the interest of an organization to "curb the cigarete evil." One of the first questions he asks is "Lets see, what church do you belong to " And invariably the answer seems to be, "That's fine, that's the church I belong to." It is said that some farmer in the vicinity of Sac City have contributed in this manner to 'curb the cagarette evil' with no assurance that one penny will ever go into a fund for that purpose.

DOINGS AT SCHOOL THE PAST WEEK

NEXT P. T. A. MEETING WILL BE TUESDAY, APRIL 28

Junior-Senion Banquet Will Given May 8th At Gym

The Ladies Aid of the local Methodist Church made the lowest bid for serving the Junior-Senior Banquet and the Juniors are busy getting ready for the occasion which will be given for the Seniors on May 8. Quite a bit of work and expense is involved in decorations for this banquet as each Junior Class feels it must introduce something entirely new and unheard of.

On April 28 at 8 P. M. will be given our next P, T. A. program in our school gymnasium. This time it will be the grade school operetta which our teachers have been at work on for some time. Let everyone keep the date open for this program and attend.

Our baseball team has lacked a little punch, it seems, for they have dropped two more games recently. Last Friday evening they lost to Britt and Tuesday Swaledale defeated them. In both games, however, the score was low. Had the rain not interfered. the results on Tuesday evening might have been more favorable for our boys.

Miss Ford of our grammar room reports that her seventh grade has made a record for attendance and punctuality. For the past six weeks every one in that grade has been in school every day and on time.

The local scholarship contest in our school is not many weeks away and some of our students are studying hard to make a good showing We wish more were interested. We would lke to have Klemme recognized for its thorough class room work. But there is much to attrac away from books this fine spring weather.

On Thursday evening of next week our girls glee club will be heard at Britt in two selections and in the all-county general chorus of high school singers of Hancock county. We hope many from Klemme may go to Britt to hear this program. General admission will be 25 cents. This is the second county music festival staged in Hancock county. We hope the interest and attendance may grow

STATE'S FAVORITE BREEDS REVEALED BY DOG 'CENSUS'

Bostons, Wires, Pekes, Setters Sheperds, Collies Lead in Popularity

What are Iowa's most popular dog breeds?

As a result of a survey of purebred dogs in this state just completed by the Chappel Kennel Foundation Rockford, Illinois, the answer to this oft asked question can now be given. The Iowa survey was part of a nation-wide "dog breed census" covering 44,988 dogs kept for companionship or exhibition. Over 70 different breeds were listed.

For convenience in tabulating th various breeds were broken down into seven recognized groups: namely, non-sporting dogs, terriers. toys bird dogs. hounds, working dogs and farm ranch dogs. The playful Boston terrier in numbers leads all Iowa dogs as well as its own non-sporting classification, although the Chow Chow, of striking Chinese appearance is becoming quite popular The Wire Fox-terrier and the Scottie, strong favorites in urban homes easily lead the terrier group Among the smaller breeds, the Pekingese, an Oriental toy dog of great antiquity, is the reigning favorite, with the Pomeranian holding a strong second place.

Setters and Pointers retain their long-time supremacy as bird dogs. bu with the retrieving Spaniels popular and well-liked in both urban and rural sections. The Beagle whose musical bark thrills the hunt is the favorite of the hounds. Most numerous of working dogs is the German Sheperd. while the Collie continues as the favorite of farm dogs.

Some interesting facts were bro out by the Foundation surve. Purebred dogs are definitely on the increase. This fact is corroborated by increased registrations on the stud books of the American Kennel Club and American Field. The larger and more heavily coated breeds predominate in the rural sections, while the smaller breeds and those having smooth, wiry or silky coats are found largely in the centers of population. Pug dogs and mastiffs, at the height of pularity at the open ing of he present century, have now all bu dissappeared.

The house dog is the answer to present day small home and apartment living, and keeping a dog with in the home is but a small problem if certain simple but essentian principles are observed. The dog should have his own little nook for rest and for receiving his meals. His sleeping place should be clean and dry and protected against draft. He should be given outdoor exercise every day Fifteen minutes of hearty romping will do him more good than several miles at a slow walk. A meal of a prepared, well- balanced meat food in the evening and some dog biscuits in the morning is all a dog needs in the way of food. Avoid table scraps, starchy or soupy foods and sweets and provide fresh, clean water at all times. Rin-tin-tin, famous movie dog, has been on just such a regime for the past eight years, and today, at 13 years of age is in better physical condition than many dogs several years younger.

News Review of Current Events the World Over

President Hoover Urges Economy in National Expenditures—Earthquake Practically Destroys City of Managua—Knute Rockne Dead.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

President Hoover

PRESIDENT HOOVER returned to Washington after an eleven-day cruise to Porto Rico and the Virgin islands, with a countenance that approximated the shade of an almost ripe tomato. West Indian sun and wind had burned his face badly, and there was a strong suspicion the skin would peel. There was no question, however, that he was rested, and greatly so, as a result of his leisurely trip.

One of his first announcements was that a tax increase could be avoided if his budget and other recommendations for expenditures were not increased by congress next winter. To that end he appealed to the nation to bring pressure on congress against "the demands of sectional or group interests."

The statement was made in the face of lagging income tax receipts indicating a treasury deficit of perhaps $800,000,000 at the close of the current fiscal year, June 30. It was regarded as part of the President's effort to mobolize public sentiment against further soldier bonus legislation, farm-relief appropriations or similar proposals in the new congress to convene in December.

Senator William E. Borah, Republican insurgent, Idaho, retorted, through the press, that "the record is that congress has appropriated less than the budget bureau has recommended each session for the last few years." He declared his willingness to cut off the $90,000,000 provided for the administration's naval building program.

A BLIZZARD in Rocky mountain and plains states took a toll of eleven lives, including five children, two men and a woman in Colorado. Scores were in a serious condition from frostbite and exposure.

Thousands of cattle perished in a wide area including Wyoming, Colorado, South Dakota, Nebraska and the western parts of Kansas, Oklahoma and Texas. In the southern part of the storm area, peach, apricot and other stone-fruit crops were ruined.

The child victims of the storm were pupils at Pleasant Hill school, Towner, Colo. The morning of the blizzard Maude Moser, the teacher, ended classes because of the storm. Carl Miller arrived to take the pupils to their homes in the school bus. Miss Moser started to walk to her home. There were twenty-two children in the bus when Miller started, all between the ages of eight and thirteen.

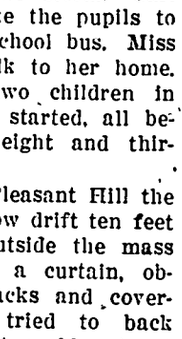
Three miles from Pleasant Hill the bus plowed into a snow drift ten feet deep and stalled. Outside the mass of falling snow was a curtain, obscuring the road, tracks and covering fences. Miller tried to back toward the school but could not get the wheels of the bus free from the drift.

After remaining with the children for many hours, Miller realized he must get aid or all would perish. In the driving storm he started out, thinking he could reach a farmhouse. Struggling on for more than three miles he fell exhausted in a cornfield and perished.

Five of the children were dead when a rescuing party found them, but the rest were saved.

There were other tragedies in the storm that swept the mountain states and other sections; but this tragedy was one to arouse the utmost pity. Bravely the children met their fate! They sang and boxed and played to keep warm, as they were told by the driver before he left them to seek aid, as urged by the young leader put in charge, until the merciless wind and chill benumbed them into helpless drowsiness.

KNUTE KENNETH Rockne, football coach of the University of Notre Dame, with a name that became a collegiate by-word, plunged to his death with five fellow passengers and two pilots on a Transcontinental and Western Air, Inc., air liner in the mid-Kansas grazing country.



Knute K. Rockne

Witnesses said the craft, flying through clouds and fog, lost a wing in the air and hurtled to the ground like a crippled bird.

Rockne had only recently recovered from an illness which a year ago had threatened to terminate his brilliant coaching career. Last year, however, he developed one of the very best of his many excellent teams, and made a schedule for 1931 which indicated that he looked forward to an equally great team this year.

President Hoover in an official statement described the death of Rockne as "a national loss."

THE development of Fascism in Italy is to be marked further on July 1 of this year by the banishment of the twelve good men and true from the penal courts of Mussoliniland. Juries are abolished with the reform of the courts of assizes, or those which try criminal cases, which Premier Mussolini will put in effect three months hence, and for them will be substituted a juridical committee, or what's called a "college" consisting of two professional judges and five nontechnical citizens who are called "assessors."

But every one cannot be an assessor. Only special categories of citizens who have high moral and intellectual, if not political attainments, will run the risk of having their names in the wheel to be drawn as assessors.

The reform of the courts of assizes and the abolition of the jury is a result of the reformed penal code in Italy, a work on which Minister of Justice Rocco and his collaborators have labored for five years. The reform was brought about by what were considered scandalous decisions often returned by juries made up of men of insufficient intellectual attainments to distinguish between the facts and the emotional bunk of the lawyers.

Discontent with these abuses had accumulated in less than a century for the jury system was only introduced in Italy in 1848.

Chancellor Bruening

DURING the formal adjournment of he German reichstag the Bruening cabinet is armed with parliamentary certified dictatorial powers to run the country until next autumn, when the reichstag reconvenes. The government also prepared measures to curb attacks on President Hindenburg.

The emergency decree enormously curtails the vital civic rights anchored to the German constitution. Basing the action on article 48 of the constitution, enabling the President to take dictatorial measures when "security and order are threatened," the decree curtails the personal rights of citizens such as the freedom of speech, the inviolability of homes, freedom of the press, secrecy in the mails, the right to meet when unarmed, the right to form associations, or own property.

Public announcements of political gatherings must be confined to the barest facts. Newspapers infringing upon the terms of the decree may be suspended for eight weeks, and other publications may be suspended for six months.

The public speaking "muzzle decree," the old timers eloquently claim, is more severe than a "ukase" in the days of the former kaiser.

During adjournment committees will continue working on a mass of internal reform projects, and the reichstag can be called together at any time on the demand of one-third of the members, or the council of elders can authorize such a special call by majority vote.

RUSSIA bade open defiance to the international grain conference at Rome when Abraham Kissin, Soviet delegate, declared that, far from reducing her wheat production, his country would increase it this year and that instead of giving up her policy of so-called "dumping," she intended to increase her wheat exports in order to pay for her imports, which exceed $500,000,000 a year.

"Any proposal to exclude from economic intercourse a nation occupying one-sixth of the world's surface is foredoomed to failure," Kissin said. "Russia's population is increasing at the rate of 4,000,000 a year, which is proportionately twice as great as the increase of Europe's population, therefore we must increase out wheat production."

The United States Agricultural department has estimated that spring wheat plantings would be reduced 14.7 per cent. This exceeded the hope of the farm board for a 10 per cent cut.

THE Cuban Supreme court has given a decision against President Machado's suspension of newspaper publication, holding that he acted in violation of the constitutional provision for free speech when he shut down presses which had published information and criticism distasteful to the government.

President Machado

Mr. Machado set forth the necessity of public security and order as reason for the prohibition of publication but without any showing that there was an emergency or that the newspaper comment was contrary to the public good.

A VAST financial organization with millions of capital to relieve the cotton producers of the South from the distress caused by low prices of their commodity, is declared to be in process of formation by Chicago capitalists, headed by William Wrigley, Jr.

Details of the scheme have not been revealed, but the main idea is understood to be to accumulate large quantities of baled cotton and hold it for higher prices. Cotton is now selling at prices ruinous to the planters and is a drug on the world market.

The plan is also said to embrace a system of trading credits by which the vast surplus of cotton will be exchanged for commodities, of which the cotton growers stand in dire need. These include farm equipment of all kinds, groceries and clothing.

Arrow Points to Managua

EARTHQUAKES and fire in Managua, Nicaragua, took an estimated toll of 1,000 dead and many thousands injured, many of them Americans. The American legation, the British legation and Nicaraguan government buildings were all destroyed. Fire following the earthquake razed twenty blocks of the business district, causing an estimated property damage of $30,000,000.

American agencies were quick to respond to the need for help. The Red Cross rushed supplies. Marines, sent to the little republic on a political mission several years ago, were used to maintain order and relieve distress.

It is too early to know definitely the extent of the disaster. Managua's population was in the neighborhood of 40,000. The region of this city is dotted with evidences of its volcanic character, and history records at least two major volcanic disasters. Nicaragua has been less afflicted with earthquakes than its Central American neighbors.

So far as is known there is not a habitable building left in the once beautiful Central American city, the second in size in the republic. President Moncado himself abandoned the national palace for a tent.

BASEBALL loses two of its major luminaries in the passing of Ernest S. Barnard and Byron B. Johnson, the president and the ex-president of the American league dying within sixteen hours of each other. Both devoted their lives to the American national game. Their terms of service in the presidency spanned the life of the league itself.

When Johnson quit the sports desk of a Cincinnati newspaper to seek his fortune in the business administration of baseball, James J. Hill had arrived as the empire builder of the Northwest, and John D. Rockefeller had established the dynasty of Standard Oil. As each of those in his separate sphere wore the Napoleonic mantle, so Johnson did in baseball. Under his leadership a rather rowdy sport became, on its artistic side, a profession, and, economically, entered the company of large affairs. It was Johnson's genius that wrought the miracle.

Mr. Barnard would have been fifty-seven years old on July 17. He had been re-elected president of the American league for a five year term. His activity in connection with the draft controversy and in the adoption of the schedule is believed to have hastened his death.

Arnold Bennett

IN THE death of Arnold Bennett, English literature has lost one of its masters, and an unbelievably long list of novels, dramas and essays comes to an end. Absorbed in the workaday world about him, never a propagandist or a preacher, shunning the mazy introspections of the new school, Bennett with mingled realism and romanticism portrayed the human comedy. With gentle irony and exacting attention to detail, he laid bare the dull materialisms and the shams of civilization, filling the most insipid with exciting interest, but never receding from his detachment to turn crusader. Sufficient of his works will survive to assure Arnold Bennett a permanent place on the world's bookshelves.

THE $1,000,000 libel suit Gus O. Nations, former prohibition agent, filed against Mrs. Mabel Walker Willebrandt, former assistant attorney general, in 1929, in connection with a series of articles she wrote about prohibition enforcement was stricken from the docket in Federal court at St. Louis for failure to prosecute.

Mr. Nations said he could not proceed any further with the suit because he had been unable to obtain service on Mrs. Willebrandt, but he asserted that suits for $20,000 damages each were pending against her in New York and Washington for alleged injury done to him by the articles.

The only observation of Mrs. Mabel Walker Willebrandt to the news that the $1,000,000 libel suit filed against her by Gus O. Nations had been stricken from the record was: "The action speaks for itself."

ETON-JACKET SUITS OF SILK OR CLOTH SMART FOR SPRING

EXPRESSES CHIC THROUGH AND THROUGH

JACKET suits, so widely heralded this season, are at their smartest when they are either eton or bolero types. It will be seen from the youthful eton suit pictured, that even when adhering to lines of strictest simplicity, this type of tailleur registers a complete departure from the regulation mannish silhouettes of yore. This subtle femininity of "lines" may be said to be characteristic of the majority of the new suit fashions.

Chic through and through is expressed in the suit pictured. Beige cloth of the popular spongy weave is its material. Its sleeve is the "last word," flaring as it does in a bell shape. Then, too, the skirt declares the latest, in that it buttons halfway down the front, featuring a snug-fitting hipline at the same time that it achieves a full hemline.

The scarf contributes a vivid splash of green which with the beige makes a striking color combination. Scarfs, by the way, are playing a most spectacular role this season, in accordance with fashion's demand. In fact, accessories in general are called upon to high-spot color to the nth degree. There's no such thing as exceeding the limit according to the color campaign which is being waged in the style realm for shoes, gloves, pocketbooks, handkerchiefs, scarfs and all the other details which complete a perfect costume.

If the gay color note is not sounded through a touch of flamboyant plaid here and there about the costume, it is perhaps because vivid stripes are flying the colors, and last but not by any means least on the program of fashion for this spring and summer, are the voguish tri-color effects worked through fabric manipulation or by combining three shades of ribbon, especially velvet ribbon which is so outstanding in the mode this season.

Turning again to the original theme under discussion—eton and bolero suits—there is this to say concerning them, the fact that they are classified under the caption "eton and bolero" in no way restricts the wide diversity of their styling. This is especially true in regard to the versatile bolero costume which is apt to be any type from a strictly tailor made to the softly styled ensemble which indulges in a silhouette which involves all sorts of whimsical details such as scallops and pleatings and novel sleeves and unusual necklines, not to forget fancy buttons which are made an outstanding trimming feature this season.

Gay Color Season.

In the world of fashion the very atmosphere is charged with gay color this season. Even the woman who has hitherto been wary of hectic hues must needs join the ranks of the color enthusiasts, if she would dress smartly.

In the separate jacket which tops the majority of costumes in the new style pageant, designers have discovered a most intriguing opportunity for exploiting color accent. The vogue takes on many phases, always with the thought of making striking contrast the outstanding theme.

One of the methods of stressing contrast is that of topping the light skirt or frock with a darker jacket. With a white jersey frock, per example, the young woman who posed for this picture wore a bright red jacket. Every other detail of her costume is white even to her kid shoes and her felt hat.

No less chic are the ensembles where the black, brown, or navy dress is contrasted with a jacket in a color so vivid as to be startling, such as for instance an orange flannel coatee with a brown frock or a gray with navy for the skirt, or red with black.

The very newest note is the light jacket with the dark skirt or gown. For some time fashionists have been calling attention to the costume which has a light top, the dress with yoke and sleeves in white, or a delicate tint sharing honors with the dark skirt via the seamed-on bodice top of lace or a light fabric. In the light jacket with the dark skirt, the vogue takes an entirely new angle.

We have in mind in this connection the white jacket worn over a black or navy skirt, white blouse completing this ultra modish trio. These jackets are made either of white satin or crepe, jersey, serge or flannel, according to the formality or informality of the occasion. Their styling varies greatly from hip-length tailored versions to boleros and etons.

STRESSING CONTRAST WITH DARK JACKET

Very good looking and clever for town and travel wear are two-piece tailleurs which partner a jacket of checked woolen with a skirt in a solid tone, a brown and beige check, for instance, with a brown skirt or checked navy and tan with navy skirt, not forgetting black with white.

TALES ... of the TRIBES

By EDITHA L. WATSON

The Apache

The tribe whose very name means "enemy," and whose history from the days of Coronado has been written in blood, would naturally resist all efforts to turn them into peaceful reservation Indians. Since their first mention in history, the hand of the Apaches was against every one. Their depredations had extended as far south as Jalisco, Mexico, and the Mexican border was the scene of many of their fiercest battles. Their own race was safer from them than was the white man's. Neither Indian village nor white settlement could foretell when the grim raiders would descend upon them and when they appeared fight to the death was inevitable. They were the scourge of the Southwest—dreaded by every one.

Apache.

It is in fairly recent times, however, that the Apaches have written their name largest on the page. It was unthinkable to these bold raiders that they should be tamely confined on reservations, and they resented the act with every means at their command. Every attempt to compel their submission was thwarted by their warlike leaders. Cochise, one of the most famous of these, led them in cattle-stealing and other manifestations of their displeasure, until his death in 1874. However, with Conchise no longer instigating trouble, they began to show a little interest in peaceful pursuits, and had the Chiricahua reservation been maintained, it is possible that the Apaches would have settled down and become more or less peaceful. But in 1876 the government abolished this reservation, and Apacheland was like an up-torn anthill once more. At least they had been on their own familiar grounds in the Chiricahua reservation, but the idea of being sent away was more than they could bear. It was not a time to fight, for the white men were too strong for them. Some of them fled into Mexico and hid in the mountains, but those who did not escape were taken to the San Carlos reservation.

The same thing happened in New Mexico. When the time came to move them, only 450 of the 2,000 Apaches were to be found, while the rest had accepted Victorio as their leader, and were once more on the raid. For about eight years the Apache were in a state of turmoil. The authorities moved them around like so many cattle—when they could catch them. But secure in their strongholds among the mountains, the larger part of the tribe successfully defied capture, and continued the depredations which made their tribe so terrible. Border raids were common, and the white settlers were in constant dread. It seemed impossible to tame these wild Apaches. Patience fortified with firearms managed to gain a foothold at last. Gen. O. H. Crook induced about 1,500 of them to go on a reservation in 1882. The next year most of the remaining Apaches surrendered, and under Crook's guidance they were slowly being trained in the ways of civilization. If the situation could have been left at this perhaps there would have been no further trouble, but a couple of years later Crook's power was curtailed. He had been able to hold them quiet as no other man had done, but his work was only at its beginning when it was brought to an unfortunate stop.

Two years of training had not tamed the savage Apaches. Half of them fled the reservation again. The Southwest was once more stirred by border raids, and although Geronimo, the Apache leader, finally asked for a parley—just as it was thought that he was secured, he changed his mind and slipped out of reach.

Crook, unable to arrange affairs with tied hands, asked to be relieved, and Gen. Nelson A. Miles took his place. Again order began slowly to emerge out of chaos. Geronimo and his men surrendered at last, unable to longer maintain their enemy status. Those Apaches who remained hostile stayed in Mexico, where they were occasionally heard from as late as 1900, but the settlers of Arizona and New Mexico were able to breathe freely.

The remains of the tribe are now living in Oklahoma. They have accepted peace as a necessity.

Not all Indian tribes used salt. It was abominated by the Eskimo, and many other tribes which could obtain plenty of salt, did not use it. On the other hand, lye, ashes of certain salty plants, or chili were used in some tribes as salt substitutes.

Tammany was the name of a Delaware chief, who was one of the signers of a deed to William Penn for lands in Pennsylvania, in 1683. His admirers called him the "Patron Saint of America," for his goodness.

Lesson for April 19

THE RICH MAN AND LAZARUS

LESSON TEXT—Luke 16:19-31.

GOLDEN TEXT—And yet I say unto you, That even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Teaches Sharing.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Teaches Sharing.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Curse of Selfishness.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Right and Wrong Uses of Wealth.

In this lesson we are afforded a look into two worlds where we see extremes of character and conditions. In this present world we see a rich man reveling in luxury and a poor man in sore affliction, begging at the rich man's gate. In the other world we see the same men with reversed positions—the erstwhile beggar enjoying the richest blessings of heaven while the former rich man suffers the torments of hell. These lives were intended to be representative. The rich man descends from the highest pinnacle of worldly enjoyment to the depths of endless misery. The poor beggar ascends from utter wretchedness and misery to the loftiest heights of blessing.

I. Contrasted Lives (vv. 19-21).

1. The rich man (v. 19).

He lived in a mansion secluded from the common people. He was clothed in costly raiment. He fed upon the richest food that could be provided. It should be borne in mind that this man is not accused of having unlawfully gained his riches. His sin was selfishly to indulge his appetites without consideration of others.

2. The beggar (vv. 20, 21).

He was laid at the rich man's gate in the hope of getting at least the crumbs from his table. No consideration was given him by the rich man, and even the dogs of the street were more kind to him. Lazarus means "God is a help," indicating that a godly life showed through his poverty.

II. Contrasted Deaths and Burials (v. 22).

1. The beggar.

He was found dead and his body hurried off to a pauper's grave. No notice was taken of it by the world, but that he was no longer to be seen at the gate of the rich man.

2. The rich man.

He also died. His gold could not bribe the messenger of death. Doubtless a costly funeral was held.

III. The Contrasted Destinies (vv. 22, 23).

1. The beggar.

He was at once carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom. The souls of believers are especially cared for at the hour of death. They go immediately to be with the Lord. Destinies are determined in this life.

2. The rich man.

Though he had an elaborate burial, he lifted up his eyes in hell "being in torments." The positions of these men are now reversed—the poor man is in the company of "just men made perfect," and the rich man is stripped of his purple and fine linen and cast into hell.

IV. The Reality and Fixedness of Life Beyond the Grave (vv. 24-31).

1. The cry for mercy (v. 24).

Dives, which is the Latin name for "rich man," was now willing to claim relationship to Abraham. He is keenly conscious, and the appetites which controlled him while on earth were still with him.

2. Abraham's reply (v. 25).

This reply cast the matter back upon the man's memory. He said: "Son, remember." The lashings of a guilty conscience will be most real in hell. The one supreme thing to remember will be the cause which led to the awful destiny. Then, too, it will be remembered that the doom is just.

3. The fixedness of life beyond the grave (v. 26).

Human destiny is fixed by the choices made during the earthly life. When one passes out of this life he enters into a state and condition which is unchangeable.

4. God's Word the all-sufficient light (vv. 27-31).

Dives requested that Lazarus go on an errand of mercy to his brethren. He regarded the testimony of a spirit of more value than the Word of God. Many today are more willing to trust the rappings of a ghost than the sure Word of God. Abraham declared that God's Word is sufficient—that those who reject Moses and the prophets would not repent though visited by one who had risen from the dead. The greatest miracles will not affect the hearts of men who reject the Bible. Lost men will learn too late the value of the soul.

Search the Bible

If the people who are perpetually running about to meetings for crumbs of help and comfort, would only stay at home and search their Bibles, there would be more happiness in the church, and more blessing in the world.—F. B. Meyer.

"Old Man's Fall"

Among the world's most wonderful waterfalls is the Kaieteur fall, in British Guiana, which has a clear drop of 741 feet. The Niagara falls are only 167 feet on the American side and 155 feet on the Canadian; and the extreme height of the Victoria falls is 343 feet The Gersoppa falls, in South India, can boast of a sheer drop of 829 feet. Translated, the Indian name of the Kaieteur fall means "the old man's fall." According to legend, an old Indian, tired of life, set out in a tiny boat and met his death in the roaring waters. The district around the fall is now a national park, and bird and animal life in it is being protected.

To an "Amiable Child"

There is a monument near Grant's tomb in New York, the inscription on which reads: "Erected to the memory of an amiable child, St. Clair Pollock, died July 15, 1797, in the fifth year of his age Man that is born of woman is of few years, and full of trouble. He cometh forth like a flower and is cut down. He fleeth also as a shadow and continueth not." The child was the nephew of George Pollock, a New York merchant who at one time owned Claremont. In this conveyance of the property in 1800 he stated: "There is a small inclosure near your boundary fence within which lies the remains of a favorite child, covered by a marble monument. You will convey a peculiar and interesting favor upon me by allowing me to convey . . . keeping it, however, always enclosed and sacred. There is a white marble funeral urn prepared to place on the monument which will not lessen its beauty."

Stories by the Yard

A literary man, or rather a writer of best-sellers, is in the habit of typing several thousand words of fiction every day. He always noticed, however, that every time he had to change the paper in his machine, he broke his train of thought and thus caused himself considerable annoyance and loss of time. So now he has hit upon the device of using a roll of perforated typing paper which unwinds itself onto the typewriter. Not only is this simple and effective, but it gives him the novel sensation of being able to measure his output, not in the number of words, but in yards!

Operation Saved Gull's Life

If seagulls are like people there is one gull flying around somewhere over Lake Michigan bragging to his fellow gulls about his "operation." He swallowed a tasty bit and found it had a fish hook in it with a boy on the other end of the line. The boy hauled the gull in, but could not remove the hook. An employee of a hospital was passing. He carried the gull to the hospital, where two doctors removed the hook, using an anesthetic. The gull soon regained consciousness, wabbled about drunkenly for a while, marched toward a window, and flew out over the lake.

Unsatisfactory

In Orange county divorce court a woman was suing because she said her husband had received kisses over a telephone. The husband, while admitting the charge, claimed that it was no cause for divorce.

"My goodness, your honor!" he remonstrated, "do you know what a kiss over the telephone is like?"

His honor protested his ignorance.

"Well," said the defendant, "it's like dreaming about something to eat when you go to bed hungry."—Los Angeles Times.

Iceland Althing First of World Parliaments

Iceland in June, 1930, celebrated two great events: the one hundred nineteenth birthday of Jon Sigurdsson, its George Washington, who wrung home rule from Denmark in 1874; the thousandth anniversary of the althing, oldest parliament in the world.

A century before the battle of Hastings, 850 years before our own government was founded, the franklins (free landowners) of Ireland were living under a constitution (the constitution of Ulfiot) and a regularly constituted lawmaking body. The althing met in midsummer and was the occasion for great feasts and merrymaking, as well as numerous bruises, lacerations and concussions.

What political life and law were like in the old days is recorded in Iceland sagas and law codes. The althing did not function perfectly, nor did the judicial system which was set up, the real governing being done by the various chieftains; nevertheless, the althing forms a magnificent tradition. It looks down from its hoary eminence with paternal solicitude for such youthful bodies as the English house of commons and the United States congress.

Talcum Production

North Carolina powders the nose of the United States, having one of the biggest talcum mines in the country near an abandoned gold mine and much more valuable than any gold mine. From the same rock which provides the finest and softest talcum for the faces and arms of women comes the talcum used in roofing and automobile tires. Much of that is sold to the motor industry, while the finer kind that goes into dainty powder boxes measures 80,000 particles to the inch and is guaranteed to shed water, resist fire and weather and protect all underlying surfaces.—Capper's Weekly.

Three Was the Limit

"You must give your husband five teaspoonfuls of this mixture every night before he goes to bed," ordered the doctor.

The patient's wife looked a little disconcerted.

"Five!" she said. "I can't doctor. I'm afraid that's quite impossible."

The doctor frowned.

"Impossible?" he said. "Oh, nonsense! What on earth do you mean?"

"Well, sir," explained the woman, "I don't think we've got more than three in the house."

Arkansas Repartee

Breathing his mild protest against the great American game of bluff and brag, a timid soul addresses the Arkansas Thomas Cat. "Do you not think," he ventures, "that in this great country of ours there is, to a degree, too much of misleading demeanor and, perhaps, a modicum of—if I may say it—deceit?" "You masticated a mouthful, brother," snorted the editor. "If all the bull this country produces were beef, porterhouse steak would sell for 10 cents a ton."

THE INDIVIDUAL AND HIS BANK

By ROME C. STEPHENSON
President American Bankers Association

BANKERS recognize that their business carries especially heavy public responsibilities and welcome all sound measures to aid them meet the duties this imposes. Unceasing efforts to bring about continually improving methods to safeguard depositors in banks of all kinds have long been uppermost in the plans of bankers' organizations throughout the nation. They are not the outgrowth merely of the past year of business adversity, but have been carried on actively for many years and have resulted in great progress along lines of better, safer banking methods. Although banking along with all business has suffered reverses, conditions in this field have been far less severe than they would have been had not bankers been widely successful in their endeavors to develop the high standards of banking that now generally prevail.

R. C. STEPHENSON

The American Bankers Association and bankers' organizations in every state actively support the principle of government supervision of banking. The national banks, which receive their charters to do business from the federal government, are under the supervision of the Comptroller of the Currency at Washington. Through his efficient staffs of expert bank examiners in every section he has the duty and powers to keep watch of the way every national bank is being conducted, to suggest desirable changes in its policies or methods and even to step in and take control for the protection of the depositors if such action is warranted. The state banks, also, which are chartered by the various state governments, are subject to similar supervision and control by state bank officials. In addition banks in many places have long maintained voluntary clearing house associations which enforce even closer supervision over their members.

Bankers Favor Public Supervision

Present laws adequately enforced contain ample provisions for government supervision. Bankers universally believe in strong, capable banking departments manned by officials with the discretion and courage to enforce these laws and act under them as the common welfare demands. They believe that these public officials should be paid sufficient salaries to command the services of men of character, ability and a resolute spirit of public service. They believe also that the banking departments should be kept free from all political or other special influence in order to be able to act at all times with single-minded independence solely for the benefit of the public interest.

Although banks in the United States operating under state or national charters are thus subject to supervision of public authority, they are strictly private business enterprises. They are owned by their stockholders and administered by officials chosen through the boards of directors which their stockholders elect. No bank is owned or operated by the United States Government, nor, with one small exception in a western state, by any state government. The function of government in banking is to promote and enforce careful banking administration through the system of examination and supervision which I have described. This, however, does not relieve the individual depositor from the necessity of judging and choosing carefully as to his banking relations, just as in his other business or professional relations. He must inquire for himself into the character and type of institution and men he shall do business with, satisfying himself as to their reputation, reliability and capability. These qualities are essential to complete the element of safety and dependability in any human institution.

An Illusory Law

The bank deposit guaranty law in any form is a snare and a delusion, declares a banker in a state where it has been tried, adding: "It is a license and encouragement to irresponsible banks and banking and penalizes capital solvency and prudent banking. It creates a sense of security in the minds of the unthinking and uninformed that is false and impossible to be realized on ultimately. To compare it to legitimate insurance is without reason and absurd. It jeopardizes the solvency of all banks and the safety of all depositors for the theoretical safety of a few. Guaranty schemes always have been, are and always will be impotent, futile and disastrous. It is not new. Has been tried, failed and discarded at intervals for more than 100 years in this country. No well-informed, honest and intelligent mind can accept it in principle or practice. Competent bank supervision and restriction of banks to territory that will warrant sufficient capital investment and accounts is the only sane and honest course and will afford all the guaranty the depositing public is entitled to as compared with other human affairs."

DUAL BANK SYSTEM FAVORED BY BANKER

State and National Institutions Supplement Each Other in Serving Country's Varied Financial Needs

RECENT suggestions that all banks in the United States be under Feeral jurisdiction, doing away with the chartering of banks by the various states recalls the opposition to this plan presented at the recent convention of the American Bankers Association by R. S. Hecht of New Orleans, Chairman of its Economic Policy Commission. Mr. Hecht said:

"There are just as good reasons why there should be state as well as national banks, as that there should be state as well as a national government. I do not think that analogy is farfetched. The states should not surrender all political jurisdiction to the central government, and the local business life of the states should not be made to surrender all control over financial functions to national financial instrumentalities. There are many variations of business conditions from state to state and there are special fiscal requirements of the various states.

"It is entirely logical, therefore, that the states should retain the right to charter banks so as to mold and direct their affairs in accordance with the states' governmental and business requirements and keep them adapted to localized sentiment and conditions.

"The argument is sometimes advanced that the dual system jeopardizes the life of the Federal Reserve System because under it there is a large group of banks that are free to remain out of or to withdraw from the system. Facts and figures prove that this is a specious argument.

"It is true that there has been some shifting from national to state charters especially in cases of mergers of large national banks with banks operating under state charters. However, the Federal Reserve System was not weakened in this process because the merged institutions almost universally retained their membership in the system on a voluntary basis. Moreover, the records show that state bank members are just as good members of the system as national banks and the ratio of state bank resources in the Federal Reserve System is constantly growing. In 1922, national banks held about 65 per cent of the resources of reserve members, and state banks about 35 per cent, while in 1929, the nationals held only 60 per cent and state banks 40 per cent.

Banking Systems Help Each Other

"Reciprocally the state and national banks systems have helped each other. If the national banking law has served in some respects as something of a model code toward which state banking laws more and more have approached year by year, so have the state codes developed valuable reforms which have suggested improvements for the national laws. A great many undesirable competitive inequalities have been wiped out by this mutual evolutionary process and further progress along the line of uniformity so far as is desirable is anticipated.

"However, I do not believe that it is a disadvantage to have two banking codes that differ in some respects. It is quite probable that the state banking code in many instances represents a closer adjustment to local conditions than could be had under the national banking laws, and this is a situation that should be retained. There should, however, not be competition between the two banking codes. Competition should be between banks themselves and not between the laws under which they operate. The effort to offer too great allurements in one code as against the other could lead only to weak banking laws. But I do think that there should be the alternative opportunities that now exist which banking institutions and local business interests may choose, so that they can function or conduct their business relationships under that banking code which best meets the conditions of the times and of the place as they see them.

"This has been illustrated in both directions. In states where such unsound measures as the guarantee of deposits were operative state banks had the opportunity to escape the baleful effect of such laws. On the other hand, when a court decision was handed down in Worcester, Massachusetts, which rendered uncertain the position of trust assets acquired by a national bank through a merger with a state bank, it was a real advantage for national banks affected to take out and operate under a state charter, either on a temporary or a permanent basis, as circumstances make expedient.

"In my opinion, bankers, national as well as state, should combat the thought that conceives of depriving us of the vitalizing benefits of our dual system."

Finance Fights Erosion

Farm terracing to stop erosion is of major importance in Noble County, Oklahoma, the county agent said, and so one of the county's national banks bought five farm levels to be loaned to farmers without charge. The machines were immediately put to use and the farmers are showing keen interest in terracing. Two terracing schools were started for adults and 4-H Club boys.

SHERWIN-WILLIAMS
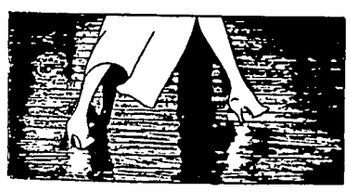
FAST-DRI MAR-NOT VARNISH

An extreme test for a varnished floor! Yes, but we all like to do it. It takes a tough varnish like Mar-not to keep "good-time" floors presentable.



When you feel the urge to save a few cents and buy a can of cheaper varnish, ask yourself: "Can I really afford anything LESS than Mar-not quality, service and durability?" No, you can't. You can really use and enjoy a beautiful floor finished with Mar-not. Scuffing doesn't ruin a Mar-not floor as it does a cheap varnish.

Kiddies are hard on floors. Mar-not comes nearest to being play-proof of any finish we know.

The secretary of war, much to the disappointment of Colonel Roosevelt, wisely made an adverse decision in his case, which was confirmed by the President. It was evident that both Mr. Wilson and Secretary Baker were looking for trained leaders and were determined to avoid the embarrassment President Lincoln experienced in the Civil war, when he was more or less driven to fill many high positions with political appointees who, in the end, had to be replaced by men trained in the military profession.

Roosevelt's Plea for Sons.

The following letter from Colonel Roosevelt, dated May 17, 1917, will show his own fine attitude:

"My Dear General Pershing:

"I very heartily congratulate you, and especially the people of the United States, upon your selection to lead the expeditionary force to the front. When I was endeavoring to persuade the secretary of war to permit me to raise a division or two of volunteers, I stated that if you, or some men like you, were to command the expeditionary force I could raise the divisions without trouble.

"I write you now to request that my two sons, Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., aged twenty-seven, and Archibald B. Roosevelt, aged twenty-three, both of Harvard, be allowed to enlist as privates with you, to go over with the first troops. The former is a major and the latter a captain in the officers' reserve corps. They are at Plattsburg for their third summer.

"My own belief is that competent men of their standing and rank can gain very little from a third summer at Plattsburg and that they should be utilized as officers, even if only as second lieutenants. But they are keenly desirous to see service; and if they serve under you at the front, and are not killed, they will be far better able to instruct the draft army next fall or next winter, or whenever they are sent home, than they will be after spending the summer at Plattsburg.

"The President has announced that only regular officers are to go with you, and if this is to be the invariable rule then I apply on behalf of my two sons that they may serve under you as enlisted men, to go to the front with the first troops sent over.

"Trusting to hear that this request has been granted, I am, with great respect,

"Very sincerely yours,

"THEODORE ROOSEVELT."

"P. S.—If I were physically fit, instead of old and heavy and stiff, I should myself ask to go under you in any capacity down to and including a sergeant; but at my age, and condition, I suppose that I could not do work you would consider worth while in the fighting line (my only line) in a lower grade than brigade commander."

CHAPTER III

Our deplorable situation as to munitions was fully discussed at a conference called by Secretary of War Baker May 10. It was brought out that we had for issue, not in the hands of troops, fewer than 285,000 Springfield rifles, caliber .30; only a few more than 400 light field guns, three-inch, and 150 heavy field guns.

As it was impossible because of manufacturing difficulties for our factories to turn out enough Springfield rifles within a reasonable time, the secretary decided to adopt the Enfield rifle for our infantry. It was then being manufactured for the British in large quantities at private factories in our country, and a slight modification of the chamber only was necessary to make it fit our ammunition. The total production of this rifle exceeded 2,000,000 during the war.

As to machine guns, it was reported to the conference that we had a few less than 1,500, and these were of four types. Congress in 1916 had appropriated $12,000,000 for machine guns, but the War department had not decided definitely to adopt any particular one for our army, although an order had been placed late in 1916 for a quantity of the heavy Vickers-Maxims.

Short on Ammunition.

Of artillery ammunition, except for the three-inch, we did not have enough to provide more than nine hours' supply, even for the limited number of guns on hand, firing at the rate ordinarily used in laying down barrage for an infantry attack.

The situation at that time as to aviation was such that every American ought to feel deeply chagrined to hear it mentioned. Of 65 officers and about 1,000 men in the air service section of the signal corps there were 35 officers who could fly.

With the exception of five or six officers, none of them could have met the requirements of modern battle conditions and none had any technical experience with aircraft guns, bombs, or bombing devices.

We had some fifty-five training planes in various conditions of usefulness, all entirely without war equipment. Of these planes it is amusing now to recall that the national advisory committee for aeronautics, which had been conducting an alleged scientific study of the problem of flight, advised that fifty-one were obsolete and four others obsolescent.

We could not have put a single squadron in the field, although it was estimated that we should eventually need at least 300 squadrons, each to be composed on the average of some 24 officers, 180 men and 18 planes, besides a large reserve of planes for replacements.

Among other subjects considered with the secretary was the assembly for training of the National Guard and the men to come in under the draft.

In lieu of any previous plans, the secretary contemplated the construction of cantonments in different parts of the country, and May 7 the commanding generals of the several departments were directed to select sites.

The actual construction of cantonments was not begun until nearly three months after we were in the war, and so great was the task of erecting buildings and putting in water works and sewers that some ninety days more elapsed by the time these centers of instruction were ready to receive troops. Thus it was, with some exceptions, practically six months before the training of our army was under way. Even then several of these camps were not favorably located, and training was seriously handicapped during the fall and winter months.

Rivalry for Our Troops.

About this time the allies brought up the question of utilizing our men to build up their armies. As we shall see, the subject arose from time to time in one form or another, and we had to fight against it until the end of the war.

Both the French and British missions, under M. Rene Viviani and Arthur G. Balfour, respectively, then in our country, were very keen to have us consent to fill up the ranks of their armies with Americans.

I was decidedly against our becoming a recruiting agency for either the French or British, and at that time this was the attitude of the War department also. While fully realizing the difficulties, it was definitely understood between the secretary of war and me that we should proceed to organize our own units from top to bottom and build a distinctive army of our own as rapidly as possible.

The evident rivalry between the British and French for control and use of our forces, even before we had an army in the field, confirmed my impression that those two governments were not working entirely in harmony. As to their armies, it had been apparent for some time that there was a lack of co-operation between them. Their efforts were often separate and distinct—that is, first one and then the other would attack.

Friends Sought to Go Along.

Although it was not generally known that I was to go abroad, there was a flood of applications to accompany me. One of them was a personal appeal for service in any capacity by my old friend, Robert Bacon, who had been ambassador to France. He had already given valuable aid to the allied cause, and because of his intimate knowledge of the French people and his tact and discretion I was glad to have him.

A few days before my departure, while at lunch at the Metropolitan club with Charles E. Magoon, ex-governor of Cuba, Charles G. Dawes joined us. The three of us had been friends in the days when we were together at Lincoln, Neb. Magoon and Dawes as young lawyers, the latter with a decided talent for business, and I as military instructor at the state university.

Dawes was an applicant for a commission in one of the engineer regiments then being organized under the direction of Samuel Felton, from volunteers with experience in railroading, and wanted me to help him get the appointment. I asked him whether he knew anything about engineering, and he said that when a youth he had carried a chain a month or so for a surveyor in Ohio.

In was not much impressed with his pretentions as an engineer or as a prospective military possibility, but I did have knowledge of his business ability and experience, and knew that he would be valuable in some position requiring his qualifications, so I spoke to the secretary of war in his behalf.

Requests from National Guard officers and from governors for the early acceptance of their state units literally poured into the War department. The clamor became so general and so insistent that the secretary of war happily conceived the idea of forming a composite division to include troops from every state in the Union. I thought the suggestion a good one and gave it my hearty indorsement. This was the origin of the Forty-second (Rainbow) division, which was later to distinguish itself in several engagements.

CHAPTER IV.

My first and my only meeting with President Wilson until after the armistice occurred May 24, 1917, when I called on him with Secretary of War Baker. After some conversation with Mr. Baker on shipping, Mr. Wilson turned to me.

"General, we are giving you some difficult tasks these days," said the President.

"Perhaps so," I replied, "but that is what we are trained to expect, Mr. President."

The President then mentioned my experience in Mexico and inquired about my acquaintance with France. I had expected him to say something about the part our army should play in the war, but he said nothing.

Promised Full Support.

Upon leaving, I said: "Mr. President, I appreciate the honor you have conferred upon me by the assignment you have given me, and I realize the responsibilities it entails, but you can count upon the best that is in me."

To this the President replied:

"General, you were chosen entirely upon your record, and I have every confidence that you will succeed; you shall have my full support."

The President then asked me to convey to the king of Great Britain and to the President of France his greetings and best wishes. His manner was cordial with his poise and his air of determination.

His assurance of confidence in me was gratifying, but in the difficult situations that arose later regarding the manner of aiding the allies, he was inclined to yield to the persistent importunities of the allied representatives in Washington.

In the actual conduct of operations I was given entire freedom, and in this respect was to enjoy an experience unique in the history of American wars.

Letter Making Him Chief.

May 27, 1917, the day before I was to sail from New York, Secretary Baker sent me a letter of instructions concerning my command, authorities and duties in Europe, which is quoted in full:

"The President directs me to communicate to you the following:

"1. The President designates you to command all the land forces of the United States operating in continental Europe and in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, including any part of the marine corps which may be detached for service there with the army. From your command are excepted the military attaches and others of the army who may be on duty directly with our several embassies.

"2. You will proceed with your staff to Europe. Upon arrival in Great Britain, France or any other of the countries at war with the imperial German government, you will at once place yourself in communication with the American embassy and through its agency with the authorities of any country to which the forces of the United States may be sent.

"3. You are invested with the authority and duties devolved by the law, regulations, orders and customs of the United States upon the commander of an army in the field in time of war and with the authority and duties in like manner devolved upon department commanders in peace and war, including the special authorities and duties assigned to the commander of the Philippine department, in so far as the same are applicable to the particular circumstances of your command.

U. S. Forces "Separate."

"4. You will establish, after consultation with the French war office, all necessary bases, lines of communication, depots, etc., and make all the incidental arrangements essential to active participation at the front.

"5. In military operations against the imperial German government you are directed to co-operate with forces of the other countries employed against that enemy; but in so doing the underlying idea most be kept in view that the forces of the United States are a separate and distinct component of the combined forces, the identity of which must be preserved. This fundamental rule is subject to such minor exceptions in particular circumstances as your judgment may approve. The decision as to when your command, or any of its parts, is ready for action is confided to you, and you will exercise full discretion in determining the manner of co-operation. But, until the forces of the United States are, in your judgment, sufficiently strong to warrant operations as an independent command, it is understood that you will co-operate as a component of whatever army you may be assigned to by the French government.

"6. You will keep the department fully advised of all that concerns your command and will communicate your recommendations freely and directly to the department. And in general you are vested with all necessary authority to carry on the war vigorously in harmony with the spirit of these instructions and toward a victorious conclusion.

(Signed) NEWTON D. BAKER."

Party Sails in Secrecy.

On the date of my sailing, May 28, 1917, my party assembled at Governor's island, New York. All had been instructed to proceed with the utmost secrecy, even wearing civilian clothes until they were aboard the steamship Baltic.

Although we ourselves stole silently out through the fog and down the bay, the large number of quartermasters and other officers stationed near New York dashing around in uniform rather ostentatiously that day really amounted to an announcement something out of the ordinary was happening.

But it must be said to the credit of the press representatives that they were most discreet, as the papers generally published nothing about us until we were in Europe.

During the voyage most of my time was spent in conference with the heads of staff departments regarding their duties and plans. The study of French was taken up by many officers, and classes were in session at all hours.

In the Danger Zone.

June 6 the Baltic began to zigzag and we realized we were in the danger zone. Next morning an escort of two American destroyers gave us something of a thrill and fully restored confidence. No submarines were observed, however, and the weather was perfect throughout the voyage.

Elevator Making Slow Headway With Britons

Although the centuries-old great tower of Windsor castle, whose topmost floors are the repository of state documents, is to be equipped with a modern elevator—or lift, as they describe it in England—that convenience of modern life does not appeal to a large number of Britons.

Lord Hanworth, master of the rolls, who is sixty-eight, thinks the government should fix sixty-five as the age limit for using elevators. He never uses the elevator in the law courts because he finds that the exercise of walking up and down the stairs is beneficial to his health.

But Oldfield Thomas, a distinguished scientist who died a few years ago at the age of seventy-four, left in his will $6,000 to install an elevator in the Natural History museum. He had toiled up two long flights of stairs at the museum daily for 46 years.

Frequent appeals were made to the government by the museum authorities to appropriate money for a lift, but none was forthcoming. Mr. Thomas then began to set aside some of his own money for that purpose.

A few days ago this lift was opened to use by the museum staff. It was on this occasion that on behalf of the trustees Lord Hanworth received it and spoke disapprovingly of the use of such contraptions by persons under sixty-five.

Nevertheless, the elevator idea is spreading in Britain. Now and then one still runs across even a new building of four or five stories unequipped with lifts, probably because the old buildings replaced had none. In the majority of cases, however, they are features of the new structures, for higher rents can be charged where they exist.—New York Sun.

SWEETEN ACID STOMACH THIS PLEASANT WAY

When there's distress two hours after eating—heartburn, indigestion, gas—suspect excess acid.

The best way to correct this is with an alkali. Physicians prescribe Phillips' Milk of Magnesia.

A spoonful of Phillips' Milk of Magnesia in a glass of water neutralizes many times its volume in excess acid; and does it at once. To try it is to be through with crude methods forever.

Be sure to get genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. All drugstores have the generous 25c and 50c bottles. Full directions in package.

Danger in Distinction English Bishop Makes

Bishop James Cannon, Jr., said at a dinner in Blackstone: "An English bishop has come out with the assertion that he is ready to preach the eternal verities, but not to preach that the animals went into the ark two by two.

"Now, it is dangerous to talk that way. It makes people think that some of us preachers preach what we don't believe in—preach lies, in short.

"It was under some such feeling, no doubt, that a cross-examining lawyer once shouted at a preacher witness:

"'Now, sir, remember, please, we want the truth and nothing but the truth here. You're not in the pulpit now, you know."—Detroit Free Press.

Sells Coal by the Ounce

There is a miner employed at Normanton, Yorkshire, England, at the Don Pedro pit, who is obtaining as much as $5 an ounce for coal. He is Tom Slator, who has earned considerable distinction in his county as a coal sculptor. During his spare time Mr. Slator has designed hundreds of miniature Bibles and animal models in cannel coal. Some, weighing only two or three ounces, have been sold for five times as many dollars.

REGULAR- PAINS

The modern Miss needs no "time out" for the time of month.

If you've ever taken Bayer Aspirin for a headache, you know how soon the pain subsides. It is just as effective in the relief of those pains peculiar to women!

Don't dedicate certain days of every month to suffering. It's old-fashioned. It's unnecessary. Aspirin will always enable you to carry-on in comfort. Take enough to assure you complete comfort. If it is genuine aspirin it cannot possibly hurt you. Bayer Aspirin does not depress the heart. It does nothing but stop the pain, so use it freely.

Headaches come at inconvenient times. So do colds. But a little Bayer Aspirin will always save the day. Neuralgia. Neuritis. Rheumatism. Pains that once kept people home are forgotten half an hour after taking a few of these remarkable tablets. So are the little nagging aches that bring fatigue and "nerves" by day or a sleepless night.

Genuine Bayer Aspirin tablets cost so very little after all, that it doesn't pay to experiment with imitations!

Simple Russian Moujik Strong for Moderation

Julius Klein, the commerce expert, was talking about Russia at the Cosmos club in Washington.

"Russia is threatened with a famine," he said, "and if a famine comes good-by to Bolshevism.

"The Russian moujik is responsible for the famine danger—he won't grow enough grain any more.

"The moujik is also responsible for the revolution's success. He favored the revolution in the first place because he knew it would give him a lot of free land at his landlord's expense. The moujik's idea of justice and moderation is embodied in the anecdote about the one who said when the revolution started:

"'The Bolsheviks promise to let me add a lot of free land to my farm, but I won't be a land hog. I'll only ask for what land joins mine."

Frightful Suicide

Complaining to his wife on his return from work that his week's wages of $8 were far too small, Ernst Gehrmann, steel worker of Cologne, dressed carefully and returned to the works. On arriving there he lighted a cigar and stood smoking near a great mixing crucible of molten metals. As the cover of the crucible was hauled up Gehrmann, still smoking his cigar, suddenly mounted the staging and jumped feet first into the glowing mass. In a few seconds there was practically nothing left of him.

ARE you prepared to render first aid and quick comfort the moment your youngster has an upset of any sort? Could you do the right thing—immediately—though the emergency came without warning—perhaps tonight? Castoria is a mother's standby at such times. There is nothing like it in emergencies, and nothing better for every-day use. For a sudden attack of colic, or for the gentle relief of constipation; to allay a feverish spell, or to soothe a fretful baby that can't sleep. This pure vegetable preparation is always ready to ease an ailing youngster. It is just as harmless as the recipe on the wrapper reads. If you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature, it is geniune Castoria. It is harmless to the smallest infant; doctors will tell you so.

You can tell from the formula on the wrapper how mild it is, and how good for little systems. But continue with Castoria until a child is grown.

Protect Corn Yields

Against Crop Losses by Semesan Jr. Seed Treatment

1. Prevents Seed Rotting
2. Improves Germination
3. Controls Root Rot Diseases
4. Increases Yields
5. Costs Less Than 3c an Acre

CERTAIN diseases known as corn root rots cause damage to the seed, plant or crop, such as partial or complete decay of the seed; seedling blight rotted roots and barren stalks.

Seed treatment with Semesan Jr. protects seed against rotting, makes early planting safer, increases germination, controls seedling blight and seed-borne infections of Diplodia, Gibberella and Basisporium.

Big Yield Increases Reported

Although the average of many tests through the Corn Belt is 3 bushels' increase per acre from Semesan Jr. treated seed, even larger increases have been reported.

Arthur J. Lutz, winner of the 1928 Michigan Corn Contest, obtained an increase of 4 bushels per acre from Semesan Jr. treated seed.

Semesan Jr. seed treatment caused an average increase of 4.2 bushels in tests conducted by the Iowa extension service on twenty-two Iowa farms.

Semesan Jr. is easily and quickly applied as a dust. Use two ounces per bushel of field or sweet corn. Harmless to seed. Does not slow up the rate of drop. Treat now or right before planting. One pound, $1.75; 5 pounds, $8.00.

Use Ceresan for seed grains and cotton; Semesan Bel for seed potatoes; Semesan for vegetable and flower seeds and bulbs.

CURFEW RINGS AT BODE

The town council at Bode have passed a curfew ordinance and here after in that town all children under 16 years of age must be kept off the street unless accompanied by their parents or guardians after 8 o'clock in the evening, at which time the curfew will ring.

NOW IS THE TIME TO APPLY THE CLUSTER BUD SPRAY

In a few days Hancock county fruit growers will start their annual fight against the bugs, worms and diseases that attack their fruit.

The cluster bud spray should be applied to the apples after the blossom buds in the fruit bud cluster have separated and before any bloom opens, according to County agent Weiss. There is usually about 5 to 7 days' time just before blossoming when this spray may be applied to be effective depending upon weather conditions, says Mr. Weiss. Warm weather will reduce this length of time.

Because the cluster bud spray is very important in the control of the most serious disease attacking the apple, apple scab, it is necessary to do a thorough job in applying it. This is especially true when there is considerable rainfall immediately prior to blossoming. This spray also controls other pests besides scab. It should always be applied before blooming as sprfaying when there is bloom open will kill bees.

County Agent Weiss recommends using 1½ pounds of lead arsenate and either 5 or 6 quarts of liquid lime sulphur or 4 or 5 pounds of dry lime sulphur to 50 gallons of mixture of spray. To get the best mixture he says to use seperate pails in mixing each material

Stir the required amount of lead arsenate in some water in one pail until it is well wetted. Pour this in the spray barrel after filling the barrel nearly full of water. Similarly, disolve the dry lime sulphur and pour it in the barrel last. Finish filling, stir thoroughly and apply at once. If liquid lime sulphur is used it can be poured in barrel without diluting it. Never mix concentrated lime sulphur and lead arsenate together. The mixture will turn black and will be ineffective.

Cherries do not need this spray but it is essential that plums receive it before they blossom to control brown rot. The plum blossoms earlier than the apple and should be sprayed earlier, if they are ow in bloom and have not been sprayed, wait until the petals drop.

All present conditions point to a good crop of fruit this year. Most fruit trees are loaded with fruit buds. Last year's drought will however, no doubt reduce the crop on many old weak trees The last two years trees bloomed earlier than normal and were later caught by cold and in some cases freezing weather during blossoming time. which greatly reduced the crop in orchards.. Fruit trees will bloom later this year by a week to ten days than in 1929 and 1930.

QUANDT'S BROTHER DIED THURS. EVE

RESTAURANT OWNER SUFFERS HEMORRHAGE AT OTTAWA

Funeral Services Held Sunday P. M. At Baptist Church

Mr. and Mrs. Conrad Quandt and daughter, Gracka, accompanied by Miss Marie Blank, were called to Utica, Illinois. last Thursday night by the sudden death of Mr. George Quandt, brother of Conrad. The party lft Klemme in Quandt's car car about midnight and arrived in the Illinois city before noon.

The following clipping is from the Utica paper and gibes the details of Mr. Quandt's death:

George Quandt, 48, known resident here for many years. died at Ryburn-King hospital, Ottawa, at 10:30 p. m. Thursday, seven hours after he suffered a stroke while in an Ottawa shoe shinng parlor.

For the past seven years Quandt was in the restaurant business with Leo Bast, operating the Utica Ideal cafe. Previous to that time, he conducted a restaurant under his own proprietorship. During his life in this city he became widely known, being an active worker in various civic enterprises.

At an inquest conducted in Ottawa Friday morning. a verdict of death due to cerebral hemorrhage was returned by a coroner's jury under the direction of Coroner L. D. Howe, of Streator.

Quandt, accompanied by his wife, came to Ottawa yesterday afternoon on a business trip apparently in the best of health.

Shortly before 3 o'clock he entered a shoe shine parlor on West Madison st. and George Streky. employed in the place, shined Quandt's shoes.

After the work was done Quandt stepped down from the bench where he had sat while his shoes were being shined, and started to joke with Streky, a friend of several years standing.

Suddenly Quandt complained of feeling ill. He sat down on a bench on one side of the place, and Streky seeing that Quandt's face was red and flushed, removed the stricken man's collar and tie, then he gave him a glass of water

Quandt asked him for a cigar, which Streky handed him. He then complained that his feet were becom ing numb and felt queer. He shuffled them around on the floor and tried to stand up. but collapsed, his head striking the corner of the bench.

Streky summoned a doctor. who ordered Quandt taken to the hospital.

Shortly after 4 o'clock Quandt lapsed into a coma, never regaining conciousness.

Quandt was born in Granville, Ill. July 14, 1882. and spent his youth in that city coming to Utica 21 years ago, where he had since resided.

In October, 1914. he was united in marriage to Jane Scott. He was a member of the Utica lodge of Masons.

Surviving him are, his wife, one sister, Mrs. Anna Phelps, of Tonica three brothers, Charles of Clear Lake, Ia; Rudolph of Belmond, Ia; and Conrad of Klemme. Ia:

His age at the time of his death was 47 years 9 months and 3 days

Funeral services were held Sunday P. M. in the Baptist Church at Utica. and Burial was made in Walton Cemetery.

ARE YOU INTERESTED IN ANOTHER WOOL POOL?

Twenty-one thousand pounds of wool was pooled last year by the Hancock county farmers and shipped and sold thru the State Wool Growers Association which is a member of the National Wool Growers Association. The advance to the farmers in most cases was as high as any local bidder would pay, however each farmer that pooled his wool last year will still receive another check which should be from two to six cents per pound.

If the farmers are interested, we will again make arrangements for pooling so that the best possible price will be secured. If you are interested in pooling your wool. will you please drop a post card to that effect to the Farm Bureau Office?

MELLON TO ASK NEW DESIGN FOR QUARTER

Within the next few days, Andrew W Mellon, Secretary of the treasury will invite prominent artists thruout the country to submit designs for the new quarter dollar which will be issued next year as, part of the nation-wide celebration of the 200th anniversary of the birth of George Washington.

This will be the first United States coin of regular issue to bear the image of Washington. It is authorized by legislation enacted just before the adjournment of congress The portrait of the first president was used on a few coins made in 1783, but they were not issued or approved by the government. Such approval might have been given but for Washington's modesty, which, no doubt, made him feel that such honors were not for the living.

Growers of Fruit Hail Court Victory

Washington.—In an opinion handed down by Justice McReynolds, the Supreme court reversed the conclusions of two lower courts in a unanimous decision that the Brogdex patent for treating fresh fruits and vegetables for market by soaking them in a solution of borax or boric acid, is invalid.

The petition of the American Fruit Growers, Inc., for a review of the case by the United States Supreme court was supported by a strong memorandum from the United States Department of Agriculture and a similar request from the state of Florida. Before the case was argued the states of California, Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana and Texas added their endorsement.

Threatened Calamity.

The American Fruit Growers contended that it would be in the nature of a calamity, affecting every fruit and vegetable grower and shipper in the United States, if a patent monopoly could be maintained by the Brogdex company on a substance in such common use as an antiseptic and preservative as borax or boric acid.

Deposition taken and witnesses examined in the United States District court at Wilmington, Del., had previously shown that it was customary in the states of Florida and California to wash citrus fruits in this mild and harmless preservative in order to impregnate the skin to resist mold and decay which usually occurs when cuts and scratches are untreated.

Under decisions of the United States District Court of Appeals of the Third circuit, at Philadelphia, the fruit trade had been particularly embarassed by the fact that not only the process of soaking fruits and vegetables in borax solution was illegal, except under license of the Brogdex company, but it was held that any fruits carrying borax in the rind or skin as a result of being washed, were patented articles so that anyone dealing in them would become subject to damages and accounting to the Brogdex company.

Patent Set Aside.

Under this decision suit had already been brought against the California Fruit Growers' exchange as the largest distributor of citrus fruit. It is stated, however, that the Supreme court decision leaves no ground for continuance of this proceeding, as it not only sets aside the patent on the use of borax, but also is to the effect that no one can be held liable under any circumstances for dealing in fresh fruits and vegetables containing borax.

Plan Fight to Finish on Gypsy Moth

Albany, N. Y.—When a few fuzzy little caterpillars escaped from a scientist at Medford, Mass., 62 years ago, they started on a march of devastation that has cost New England states $100,000,000.

A relentless war is now being waged in the Hudson and Champlain valleys to prevent the ravagers from invading the rest of the country.

The New York conservation department, in announcing the enormous loss suffered by New England in devastated forest, fruit and shade trees, warned that a new infestation of gypsy moths, which grow from the little caterpillars, has just been discovered in the town of Milan, Dutchess county, a few miles west of the Connecticut state line.

A barrier zone has been set up to block the pests' advance, with department scouts and exterminators on constant vigilance.

This year Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt recommended that the annual appropriation for the insect war be doubled, so as to serve the dual purpose of strengthening the state's forces against the ever increasing horde and to provide extra jobs for unemployed, and it is being done.

Conservation Commissioner Henry Morgenthau, Jr., has asked federal authorities for increased assistance in cleaning up the heavily infested area in New England. It is hoped the federal appropriation also will be doubled.

The invasion began in 1869, when a few of the insects which Leopold Trouvelot was cross-breeding with silkworms in an effort to produce a silkworm immune to certain diseases, accidentally escaped. He notified the proper authorities, but no attention was paid the matter until 20 years later, when ravages of the pests, which Trouvelet had imported from Europe, began to cause general alarm. In 1890 the Massachusetts legislature took official cognizance of the menace and spent $1,000,000 during the following ten years in a futile effort to halt the advance. Since then the monetary loss has multiplied 100 times, according to the New York officials.

Flies

There are 40,000 known species of flies. While there are several common traits and resemblances, the most noticeable is that all have but two wings. Gnats, blow flies, mosquitoes, and midges are the most common groups in addition to the "house fly." If none of her offspring were killed, one female house fly would produce 131 quintillion descendants in six months.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By WALTER TRUMBULL

Preparations for a New York musical show are most elaborate. There is the producer; the man who writes the lyrics; the man who composes the music; the man who writes the book; the dancing coach; the designer of costumes; the designer of sets; the stage manager; the boss scene shifter; the boss electrician; other bosses, and usually, the angel. After the costumes are designed for the various scenes, they are made by some big costume house. The chorus girls all go around for fittings. If they don't like the costumes assigned them, some rage, and some burst into tears. Each girl puts on her costumes and stands on a little lighted platform, so that the designer, the producer and others can see the effect. Hundreds of costumes are hung on long racks. All is noise, argument and confusion. It is a colorful scene. After five o'clock, the "finishers" come in. They probably have worked somewhere else all day and hurried there to make an extra dollar. Most of them shabbily dressed, some of them looking as if they didn't have enough to eat, they take their thimbles and needles from worn, flat purses and hurriedly sew hooks, eyes, buttons and bows on shining silk or gorgeous satin. Lots of them don't even take the time to find a seat, standing up to ply their needles and thread. They are the ants of life, working for the butterflies.

While radio artists entertain an unseen and unseeing audience, most of them dress just as carefully for their jobs as if they were appearing on the stage. There is one who is a glass of fashion from head to foot, but the foot is not included. His weakness is comfortable shoes and he usually wears a pair that look as if he had traded some hobo out of them.

GRATITUDE

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

I have no doubt that people in general feel a greater sense of appreciation or gratitude or whatever you are pleased to call it for the many favors or courtesies which they receive from the hands of their friends than they usually express. The Boy Scout is under obligation to do a gratuitous kind act daily. I believe it would be a fine thing to organize a society which should have as one of its tenets that each member orally or in writing should every day give expression to some words of gratitude for kind acts received. It is quite as much a duty to acknowledge a courtesy as it is to offer one. Nothing gives me more pleasure than the unexpected gratitude of some one to whom I have been able to show, consciously or unconsciously, some little attention.

For instance, I had in this morning's mail a letter from Dunken who has been out of college two years or so, and has in reality almost passed out of my memory, so slight was our acquaintance. I had indirectly been responsible for his getting a small loan in his senior year which tided him over a financial difficulty and kept him from leaving college before graduation. His note was to thank me for the service I had done him and to say how much the money had meant to him. He had met the obligation before it was due with the hope that some other unfortunate might be helped as he himself had been. I suppose I had officially and otherwise been able to help a hundred boys out of a hole who had taken the service as a routine attention to which they were entitled, but here was one who was grateful and who had expressed his gratitude.

I suppose there are reasons why more people do not do as Dunken did—carelessness, ignorance, laziness, procrastination—you can name a few yourself, but be that as it may, it is a good business procedure to make acknowledgements; it cements friendships, it gives the people pleasure who have shown us the attention, and often it suggests to them the obligation to do the same things.

Gratitude sincerely expressed is a lubricant which tremendously aids the smooth running of all sorts of social and business machinery.

By General John J. Pershing

Lord Mayor of London Welcoming General Pershing to British Soil.

We stemmed into Liverpool June 8. A cordial reception awaited us, with a guard of honor from the Royal Welsh fusiliers. This selection had a sentimental significance in that the regiment not only fought against us at Bunker Hill but fought beside us during the Boxer rebellion in China. As we stepped off the gangplank the band played "The Star-Spangled Banner" to welcome us, this being the first time in history that an American army ever was received officially in England.

A royal coach attached to a special train took our party to London. At Euston station we were welcomed by Lord Derby, secretary of state for war; Field Marshal Sir John French, Gen. Lord Brooke, Walter Hines Page, the American ambassador, Admiral Williams S. Sims, and many other British and American officials.

King George Not Optimistic.

I was received by King George at Buckingham palace June 9. His majesty was in the uniform of a field marshal and he talked with me in democratic fashion for a few minutes before the other senior members of my staff were presented. The king expressed his pleasure that America had come into the war, and dwelt upon the fact that Anglo-Saxon people were united at last in a common cause.

"The Anglo-Saxon race must save civilization," he added.

Certainly his majesty did not appear optimistic over the outlook, and asked me numerous questions about America's preparation for war.

Leaving the palace, we went to our embassy and during an informal talk Mr. Page remarked how happy he was that America was at last in the war, and added:

"Now I am able to hold up my head and look people squarely in the eye."

Through his service as ambassador he was beloved and honored by the British people, who admired his virile personality, but many Americans did not approve of his rather apologetic attitude toward his own country prior to our entry into the war in aid of the allies.

Admiral Sims Not Satisfied.

I had a talk with Admiral Sims, who was not in personal command of our fleet serving with the British navy, but remained in London with an office at our embassy and directed the movements of our naval vessels, especially destroyers, from there.

He was not satisfied with the support given him from home, and complained that the Navy department had not sent all the destroyers asked for. He said the department seemed to fear attacks along our coast and did not realize the danger to the cause in the enormous destruction of merchant shipping going on in European waters.

The admiral's report of these losses was nothing short of startling, but he thought they might be checked if he could have a sufficient number of destroyers. Without more of this class of vessels, Sims was not sanguine over the prospects of protecting our transports. However, he made it clear that every possible effort would be made to that end.

CHAPTER V

I was a guest at luncheon at Buckingham palace June 11, 1917, with the American ambassador, Walter Hines Page, and Mrs. Page. The king, the queen and Princess Mary were present. There was an air of charm and simplicity at the palace that permitted a freedom and intimacy in the conversation. The plain fare was quite in keeping with the food situation throughout England.

After luncheon the king, the ambassador and I stood near a window overlooking the garden, which, as his majesty explained, instead of growing flowers, was producing potatoes. The king told of the kaiser's visit to London a few years before and how he had brought his chief of secret service along and put him up at one of the hotels to learn all he could while the kaiser himself was a guest at Buckingham palace.

His majesty spoke bitterly of the inhumanity of the Germans, dwelling especially on the night bombing of London. Pointing to the beautiful statue of Queen Victoria just outside the window, the king suddenly exclaimed:

"The kaiser, God damn him, has even tried to destroy the statue of his own grandmother."

For a moment I was surprised at his words, but I quickly realized that it was a solemn expression of profound indignation, and not profanity.

Calls on Chief of Staff.

After leaving the palace I called on Gen. Sir William Robertson, chief of the imperial general staff. He was a rugged, heavy-set, blunt soldier, of Scotch descent, whose record in the army had been exceptional in that he had risen from the grade of private to his then high position.

As he sipped his tea I explained our plan for the organization of our armies by using the small regular force and the National Guard as a nucleus. As the British themselves had gone through the same experience two years before, I stressed the fact that it would take considerable time.

Like all the British officials, he was much in favor of having our forces serve with or near their own. He pointed out that we were both Anglo-Saxons, spoke the same language, and gave other reasons to support his views.

It seemed necessary to explain in detail that as the American navy was working with the British navy we should probably plan to place our army beside the French if there was to be any preference. It appeared logical that we should do this, as we were to operate on French soil and use French ports, railways and material. The main thing, I went on to say, was to form our own army as soon as possible for use wherever it seemed best.

No British Aid in Shipping.

I emphasized our lack of tonnage and told him that we must have additional shipping if we were to bring over an army worth while, but his reaction to this was not encouraging. He said he thought that it was entirely out of the question for them to provide us with any British shipping, as they were already in sore straits to find vessels for their own national necessities.

I called on Mr. David Lloyd George, the prime minister. He went right to the point and asked when troops would be organized and trained and the numbers we expected to send over. He was cordial enough and expressed a desire to assist us in every possible manner, but when I stressed our need of assistance to bring over our troops he did not seem to be particularly interested and gave little hope that the British would be able to furnish us any shipping whatever.

Under the circumstances the apparent unconcern of the British as to our need of shipping is not difficult to understand. They were seriously alarmed regarding their own food situation. It seemed to me, however, that they had allowed their pessimism to carry them too far in the direction of hopelessness. At the moment, they could see no relief for the future and no prospect of aiding us in tonnage.

Great Ovation in France.

After leave-taking calls and numerous informal visits, conferring with various leaders and making one trip to a training camp, our party left June 13 for Folkestone and France. At Boulogne we again received an impressive welcome, and a few hours later we were in Paris.

The officials who met us at the station included M. Paul Painleve, minister of war; Marshal Joseph Joffre, Rene Vivian, Major General Foch, then chief of staff, and United States Ambassador William G. Sharp. There were many others. The station was packed and the atmosphere seemed electrical with pent-up enthusiasm.

Outside dense masses lined the boulevards and filled the squares along the route to our hotel, the Crillon. Cheers and tears mingled as men and women shouted acclaim. Women climbed into our carriages screaming "Vive l'Amerique" and threw flowers until we were buried.

It was said that never before in the history of Paris had there been such an outpouring of people. I was to see its parallel when the armistice was signed and on two other occasions, once when President Wilson arrived and later when the victory parade took place, July 14, 1919.

At Napoleon's Tomb.

Although I was very anxious to get to work, it was necessary for me to make certain official calls and attend a few entertainments that had been planned for us. The French suggested that we should first go to visit Napoleon's tomb in Les Invalides.

We were taken down to the crypt, where I was handed the great key and was asked to unlock the heavy wrought iron entrance door. We were shown uniforms and the baton that belonged to Napoleon and then his sword. Our veteran escort reverently removed the sword from the case and offered it to me, as if to transmit some of the genius of the great captain.

So much of French sentiment and tradition are associated with this tomb and its treasures that every one who visits there with Frenchmen must share their feeling of profound emotion. This incident, more than any other connected with my reception, impressed me with the martial spirit of the French people.

Finds Poincare Reserved.

I called next to pay my respects to President Poincare and to present greetings from President Wilson.

"The French people are very happy," he said, "that America is in the war. Your coming is a great satisfaction to us."

He inquired generally about our plans, seeking, as they all did, some assurance that we should soon be in the trenches. His attitude was rather formal and reserved, but he at once impressed me as a man of ability and force.

Petain "Most Agreeable."

A visit to French general headquarters at Compiegne was made, primarily to meet General Petain and the officers of his staff. Petain is above medium height and weight. He wore a full mustache, slightly gray, and was then about sixty. He has a kindly expresison and is most agreeable, but not especially talkative.

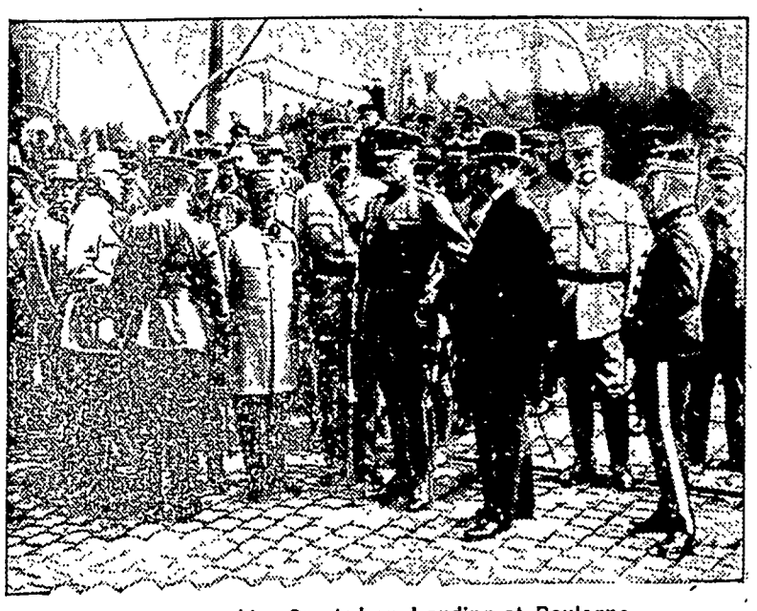
His keen sense of humor became apparent from the jokes he told at the expense of some of his staff. Our conversation after luncheon was almost entirely on military affairs, including America's probable part in the war, which, as matters stood, gave little promise of becoming effective until the following spring.

My impression of Petain was favorable and it remained unchanged throughout the war. Our friendship, which I highly treasure, had its beginning at this meeting.

At the luncheon there were several general officers, among whom was Maj. Gen. Franchet d'Esperey, then in command of a group of armies under Petain. He was considered one of the ablest and most aggressive officers in the French army and was very popular with his men.

As we wished to get a glimpse of the actual front he took us by motor as near as possible without drawing the fire of the enemy's artillery, although at that time there was little activity on that part of the front. The point of observation that we reached was opposite St. Quentin, which was then within the enemy's lines, and which was later near the center of the great German drive of 1918 against the British.

On the return trip the chauffeur, after being cautioned several times, continued to drive at a somewhat dangerous speed, which so exasperated the general that he finally threatened the chauffeur with violence, whereupon the speed was greatly reduced.



General Pershing Greeted on Landing at Boulogne.

CHAPTER VI

As soon as the formalities incident to our arrival in Paris were over—and I made them brief as possible—we got down to work, as it was urgent that we should begin at once to lay the foundation for the development and employment of the American army.

To expedite handling the many questions that must arise, especially in our relations with the French war office, which controlled practically all industrial facilities and transportation, it was War Minister Paul Painleve's idea that there should be a group of French officers placed at our disposal.

Marshal Joffre was designated as head of this liasion group. The instructions received by Marshal Joffre from the minister of war were transmitted to me in a polite note. Naturally, it was pleasing to think of being associated with Marshal Joffre, but I thought the adoption of the plan at this time would only add an extra channel through which requests must pass and that this would complicate rather than simplify matters.

The scheme indicated that a sort of tutelage was contemplated, which also made it objectionable.

In my opinion, it would be more expeditious to utilize the French officers on duty at my headquarters and develop a workable system through experience. I explained my views to M. Painleve and readily arranged for the officers of our supply department to confer directly with the chiefs of the coresponding bureaus of the French organization. But this was only the beginning and we soon found that we had much to learn of the difficulties of dealing with French bureaus, either directly or indirectly.

There was no question that under the great enthusiasm the afternoon of our arrival there existed serious despondency among all classes. The terrible strain of the previous years of continuous fighting, with heavy losses, was telling against both the French and the British. Temporary success in different theaters of war had brought small comforts, followed as they had been all too frequently by disastrous reverses.

With actual conditions in mind, one could fully understand why the allies had been so insistent that a contingent of American troops be immediately sent to France to bolster their morale. While not yet prepared to do any fighting, we could and did furnish men for service behind the lines. We also provided raw material and certain manufactured supplies as rapidly as possible and financial aid without stint.

U. S. Inaction Shows Effect.

The more serious the situation in France, the more deplorable the loss of time by our inaction at home appeared. It is true that a committee at the war college in February had presented a brief outline report on the organization of a limited force, yet no comprehensive general plan had been considered for the formation or employment of such a force, much less for a larger one.

It was finally decided we should use the ports of Bordeaux and St. Nazaire. It was likewise estimated that the rail lines leading to the Lorraine sector, with collateral routes available, could be improved to meet our needs.

Then it became necessary to determine the sector where our forces, fighting as a unit, would be most effective. After lengthy study and consultation with allied leaders it was logical to conclude that from the purely military standpoint the employment of the American armies on the Lorraine front would prove the most beneficial. In conference with General Petain, who had reached the same conclusion, the decison was made accordingly.

It was necessary to have a particuar sector in mind to plan definitely and construct requisite rail and distributing facilities. It was tentatively understood between General Petain and myself that the American sector should include the St. Mihiel salient. I suggested that the first American offensive would naturally be its reduction. He fully agreed.

Place of Red Cross Decided.

Maj. Grayson M. P. Murphy, head of the Red Cross in France, and his assistant, James H. Perkins, called at my headquarters June 17 to discuss co-operation with the army. It was decided the Red Cross could best handle its work if given a semiofficial status, so Major Murphy was attached to my headquarters.

It was the French situation that gave me the gravest concern. Pacifist sentiment was prevalent in France and in many quarters there was talk of a peace parley. This pessimistic and despondent mood of the people further depressed the morale of their armies as men at the front contemplated another winter of suffering and distress for their families.

To help meet these conditions I suggested to Major Murphy that the first task of the Red Cross should be to aid needy French people. As a result he and Perkins proposed that funds be distributed to soldiers' families wherever necessary.

When the idea was presented to General Petain he expressed the keenest appreciation and at once undertook through his military organization to obtain the necessary data. The Red Cross arranged to make 5,000,000 francs (nearly $1,000,000) available to be distributed by local charitable agencies as rapidly as the information could be furnished as to where funds should be sent.

Sees First Troops Arrive

I went to St. Nazaire June 28 to meet the advance elements of the first division and inspect the port.

When You CAN'T QUIT

A headache is often the sign of fatigue. When temples throb it's time to rest. If you can't stop work, you can stop the pain. Bayer Aspirin will do it, every time. Take two or three tablets, a swallow of water, and carry-on—in comfort.

Don't work with nerves on edge or try all day to forget a nagging pain that aspirin could end in a jiffy! Genuine aspirin can't harm you; just be sure it's Bayer.

In every package of Bayer Aspirin are proven directions for headaches, colds, sore throat, neuralgia, neuritis, etc. Carry these tablets with you, and be prepared. To block a sudden cold on the street-car; quiet a grumbling tooth at the office; relieve a headache in the theatre; spare you a sleepless night when nerves are "jumping."

And no modern girl needs "time out" for the time of month! Bayer Aspirin is an absolute antidote for periodic pain.

Take Bayer Aspirin for any ache or pain, and take enough to end it. It can't depress the heart. That is medical opinion. That is why it is only sensible to insist on the genuine tablets that bear the Bayer cross. The pocket tin is a convenient size. The bottle of 100 tablets is most economical to buy.

MORE MILES OF ALL-YEAR ROAD ARE NEEDED

The American Farm Bureau Federation states that road work has received considerable impetus from the making available of Federa funds, and that materials which permit the surfacing of more miles o year-round roads are being favored

A highway system which neglect the farmer is damaging to general progress. Secondary roads, bringing rural areas into all-year contact with the outside world, can help solve many of agriculture's problems.

The present time, with low material costs and plentiful labor, is particularly propitious to highway progress. About eighty per cent of money spent fo roads goes to workmen. Every time we build a road, we are making an investment that will not only be of assistance in relieving unemployment and aiding business now, but one that will pay profitable dividends far into the future.

THE SILVER CRISIS

The low price of silver is a leading cause of depressed word conditions. Silver, as currency, has been debased in a number of countries which have established the gold standard. Buying power has gone down, resulting in a shrinking market for wheat and other commodities. It is more than doubtful if the business of the world can be carried on with gold.

DEPRESSION'S BEST FRIENDS

The greatest barrier business faces in returning to normal is the threat of higher taxes.

It is all very well to advocate taxing the big fellow to help the little fellow. But it is the big fellow who gives that little fellow his job who keeps him employed at good wages. and enjoying exceptional living standards. Too, in the United States, the little fellow has been purchasing for himself interests in our great industries, so that it is often hard to tell where "capital" leaves off and "labor" begins.

Prosperity-which is principally a matter of employment-can only return with increased industial activity, which, in turn, results from an influx of new money. Tax raising schemes that discourage industrialists and investor alike are depressions best friends.

PROTECTING THE CHILD

Many communities are planning programs for May Day emphasizing child health and accident prevention This is part of the general year-round safety campaign conducted by schools and various child-protective organizations.

At a time when accidents and deaths to adults have constantly risen, child fatalities have been on the down grade. This is the direct result of the teaching of fundamentals of accident prevention and good health in schools. It is an invaluable work, not only because of the lives now being saved but because it is paving the way for safer street, highways and homes in the future.

Bargains! Bargains! Bargains!

It's second nature to Nevilles to hand out bargains and we have a store full of them to hand out. In the last week we havo unpacked and crammed into our little store over $4,700 worth of shoes and furnishings on top of what we had, so we sure have a room full of merchandise. All new tandard goods bought from tho best factories in the U. S. and bought at a big discount for spot cash. We are carrying the snappiest line of men's and women's slippers and oxfords that were ever hown at $2.98 and $3.95. They are one of the big reasons why Neville's are always busy.

Most merchants say good standard articles can't be sold as cheaply a we sell them and that we will go broke at the game we are playing. But we would rather go broke in an eight cylinder way than to go broke in a one cylinder way anytime. Modern merchandising is changing. The merchant with the 50% proft has got to step aside for the small profit plan. Just like the horse and buggy has stepped aside for the automobile. The 50% merchant has created the chain stores and catalog houses by getting more profits than he should and now all he does is to sit around and kick about them. Our plan is to sell on small profits, keep down the overhead expenses and sell more goods.

GIVE GRASS CHANCE TO GROW

Pastures Backward and Need Good Start This Spring

Due to shortage of hay, dairymen may be inclined to turn their cows into the pasture early this spring, but because of the dry spring and the backwardness of pasture it would be disastrous to turn them on until the grass has made a good growth. believes C Y Cannon, head of the Dairy Husbandry Department at Iowa State College

It will be more economical for dairymen to use grain, which is relatively cheap this spring, in large quantities in order to maintain their herds in case there is shortage of roughage

At the Iowa State College dairy farm a high flow of milk and apparent health have been maintained for periods up to two months when the cows were only getting 7 to 8 pounds of roughage and the balance of their nutrients from grain. It is easier to make the roughages last longer by the use of more grain.

Mrs. W. F. Missman received the sad news Monday might that her sister, Miss Gertrude Ely was seriously ill in the hopital at Oberlin, Ohio. Miss Ely teaches music in Oberlin college.

PLANET EROS DASHING TOWARD EARTH

LONDON:— The planet Eros is dashing toward the earth at terrific speed but astronomers are remain ing calm.

It still has 16 million miles to travel before the crash is expected Eros, discovered by a German in 1898, is distinguished from other planets by the fact that its path at one point lies nearest to that of the earth.

Astronomers throughout the world are taking photographs of it twice nightly as part of an attempt to measure the sun's distance from the earth.

Person of Unusual Size Classed as Monstrosity

Many persons admire giants, perhaps envy them, and imagine that they are examples of a superior humanity. A complete error; for gigantism is an anomaly, a monstrosity, as much so as dwarfism.

It is really a disease. The work of anthropologists has shown that the giant is a man that is still a child, in whose case growth does not stop at the age when normally he ought to have ceased to grow. The giant is rarely well-proportioned; his hands and feet are almost always too large, his face is generally distorted.

Physicians who have studied gigantism say that giants are all diabetic. Professor Landouzy says also that almost all of them are candidates for tuberculosis. They are subject to all sorts of other morbid troubles; they tire sooner than normal persons; they are unfit for all violent labor; their muscles are weak in spite of their size; their nerves lack resistance, and they are often affected with neurasthenia. Handsome giants are rare.—Jean Lecoq in Le Petit Journal, Paris.

Many Plants That Lure Insects to Their Death

There are a great many varieties of insectivorous plants which grow almost all over the world. The first group of these plants is known as the pitcher plants, which have the blossom in the form of a pitcher which acts as a death trap for flies and other insects. The insects are attracted by a fragrance or some other lure, enter the mouth of the pitcher, and crawl down toward the bottom, being forced onward by small spikes downward pointing from the sides of the pitcher's throat. The poor fly is thus given no chance to escape and when he reaches the bottom he is caught in the sticky mass of fluid there and his body juices absorbed by the plant. Two other types of insectivorous plants are the Venus' flytrap genus and the Dionaea which grows only in the low coast regions of North Carolina. This little plant is probably the most famous stem variety of the insect-eating plants. A third type is a Sundew Drosera, which is common to Australia. This is also a large genus containing a great variety of species.

Odd Beliefs Long Held Concerning the Sneeze

The Greeks, when they ask for a blessing upon those afflicted by sneezing, "claimed to follow the example of Prometheus, who stole celestial fire to animate the beautiful figure he had made of clay; as the fire permeated its frame, the newly formed creature sneezed, and the delighted Prometheus invoked blessings on it." According to Aristotle, the first man who conceived the idea that the head was the principal seat of the soul, regarded the sneeze with great respect because it was the most manifest operation of the head. Hence the compliments of the Greeks and Romans, "Long may you live; may you enjoy health."

Some rabbis explain the custom by declaring that not long after the creation, God made a general decree that every man should sneeze but once, whereupon his soul should depart from his body without previous warning or indisposition. Jacob got the decree withdrawn so that man can sneeze as often as he chooses without danger. Therefore, whenever a man finds himself still living after a good gusty sneeze, people should express their gratitude with a blessing.

Birth Rate of Leaders Found Below Average

Except under very favorable conditions, such as that in royal families, the successful sections of society have always tended to die out. Just now our college graduates are easily demonstrated to be vanishing as a human breed. From them have sprung nearly three-fourths of our leaders, and in the future nearly all our leaders will secure some form of higher instruction.

In addition, Dr. Raymond Pearl of Johns Hopkins has shown that all occupational classes, which he divides into nine categories, are disappearing as groups, owing to insufficient birth rate. Only three classes, he finds, are reproducing themselves, namely, the farmers, factory workers and miners. The other six, namely the professionals, clerical, trade, domestic service, public service, and transportation groups, are not maintaining themselves.—Albert Edward Wiggam.

Test for Posture

An excellent test for correct posture, says Marguerite Agniel in the Parents' Magazine, is to stand facing the wall, placing the hands against the wall in front of the thighs so that the palms point upward. Now notice which part of the body strikes the wall first. If it is the chest, well and good; if it is the head, it is not so bad, but if the stomach touches first, something is wrong. To attain correct posture stretch the arms above the head until the back is arched and the chest high. Then with elbows pulled all the way down, draw the hands down to the shoulders, head back. Now retaining the general position of the body, return the hands to the sides and you will find yourself standing perfectly. Exercises for correcting bad posture include pushing up with the arms from a reclining position and raising the trunk from the same position without lifting the feet.

Feared Census Taking

One of the deterring factors in conducting a count of the early Colonists was superstition, says an article in the United States Daily.

In 1712 Governor Hunter of New York attempted an enumeration, but it was so inaccurate that he apologized to the home government and said that the inaccuracy was due to the superstition among the people that sickness had followed the last enumeration. Being so close to the New England colonists, these early settlers likened the enumeration to the sin that David committed in numbering the people, and they feared it might bring on the same judgments.

"New Netherland" Correct

The name of the Dutch colony in America is singular in form—"New Netherland." Even reputable historians frequently fall into the error of referring to it as New Netherlands. The country in Europe is officially and correctly called the Netherlands because it consists of an aggregation of small states; but the Dutch colony in the New world was a single province or unit and was properly called New Netherland. The name was always so spoken and written by the Dutch. —Pathfinder Magazine.

Woman's Ideal Stature

The Society of Directors of Physical Education has set forth the following standard for the ideal woman of today: Height, 63½ inches; breadth of neck, 3.8 inches; girth of neck, 12.1 inches; breadth of shoulders, 14.7 inches; breadth of waist, 8.6 inches; girth of waist, 24.6 inches; breadth of hips, 13.1 inches; girth of hips, 35.4 inches; girth of calf, 13.3 inches; girth of upper arm, 10.1 inches; girth of thigh, 21.4 inches, and forearm, 9.2 inches.

New Theatrical Idea

Out-of-work theatrical artists in Paris have hit upon a new method of bringing in the few honest sous that they require to sustain life. They have decided to revive a few of the old "thrillers" of decades ago and give them on an improvised stage in one of the public squares. The audience will give what it thinks the show is worth —by the tincup method.

Nicholas Longworth's Death Ends Long and Honorable Political Career—Senator Bingham's Taxation Idea—Cabinet Changes Unlikely.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

Nicholas Longworth

NICHOLAS LONGworth, speaker of the house of representatives, veteran Ohio congressman, and son-in-law of Theodore Roosevelt, died of pneumonia at Aiken, S. C., where he was spending a spring vacation.

Aiding the three physicians and staff of nurses who sought unavailingly to halt the malady was the speaker's wife, Alice Roosevelt Longworth.

Born to wealth and position on November 5, 1869, in Cincinnati, Ohio, his home ever since, Mr. Longworth, after attending Franklin school there, was graduated in 1891 from Harvard. He spent one year in Harvard law school, then transferred to the Cincinnati law school, graduating from that institution in 1894.

Although admitted to the bar, he did not practice to any extent. Instead, he became interested in civic affairs and soon was immersed in politics in the city over which "Boss" Cox then held sway. Despite his persistent inclination to remain "regular" in political controversies, he declined to take dictation from the Cox organization and never was closely identified with it.

A six year term as speaker culminated the service of Nicholas Longworth in the house of representatives during thirteen congresses.

But three speakers in the history of the house occupied longer the chair to which Mr. Longworth was elevated by his Republican colleagues after twenty years' apprenticeship as a "boy" representative from Ohio, distinguished service on the powerful ways and means committee and one term as majority floor leader.

He was the Republican candidate for speaker of the next house, in which that party now holds a majority of only one.

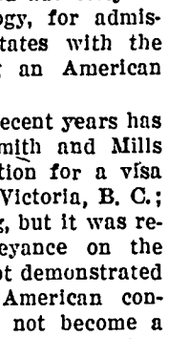
AN IMMIGRATION case which may develop into national importance with wide consequences has arisen through the application of Miss Ella Young, Irish author and authority on ancient Celtic mythology, for admission to the United States with the intention of becoming an American citizen.

Miss Young, who in recent years has lectured at Vassar, Smith and Mills colleges, made application for a visa in November, 1930, at Victoria, B. C.; where she is now living, but it was refused or held in abeyance on the ground that she had not demonstrated satisfactorily to the American consulate that she might not become a public charge, based upon the view that Miss Young, being sixty-six years of age, without independent means and a writer, might not always be self-supporting.

Notwithstanding appeals from prominent educators, financiers and lawyers the State department refused to take cognizance of the case. It simply stated, what it has said without exception since the immigration act of 1924 was amended in 1927, that the American consul who passes upon applications for visas is the court of first and last resort in such matters.

Miss Young was a resident of this country from October 15, 1925, until November 18, 1930. She arrived upon a visitor's permit which was repeatedly extended, upon suitable bond being posted, but left the country at Seattle on November 18, 1930, although her permit had been extended to July 1, 1931, and went to Victoria.

It was her intention to make her permanent home in California and write a book on Irish mythology. In addition, friends were arranging for a chair in Irish mythology to be established for her at some California university.



Earl of Bessborough

THE earl of Bessborough, Canada's new governor general, comes to the Dominion heralded as the wealthiest man ever to hold the office. He is also the first governor general to be chosen by the Canadian government. Under the new Dominion status he was appointed by the king on the advice of his Canadian ministers. The appointment was announced from Ottawa, not from London.

Early governors general of Canada were actual as well as official heads of government. They took a direct part in the administration of public affairs. One negotiated a treaty with the United States, another plunged directly into a political campaign, a third was attacked with eggs in Montreal when he signed what was known as the rebellion losses bill. Thirty years ago a governor general blocked a list of appointments being rushed through by a defeated government.

By degrees, however, governors general came to take a less active part in politics. Only once in recent years has a governor general acted against the advice of the premier. When W. L. M. King was defeated in the house of commons a year after a general election, Lord Byng declined to dissolve parliament and called on Arthur Meighen to form a government. When Meighen was defeated within a week an election had to follow. The constitutional issue—the right of a governor general to decline the advice of the premier to dissolve parliament—was one of the main features of the campaign and the return of Mr. King to office made it certain that never again would a governor general reject a premier's advice.

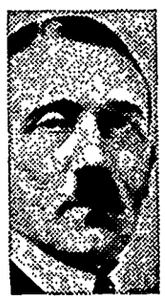
Sec. Arthur M. Hyde

OFFICIAL denial that Arthur M. Hyde, secretary of agriculture, would resign, and that President Hoover would shortly reorganize his cabinet, seemingly sets at rest recent widespread reports of dissension in the President's official family, since the denial also extended to Dr. Ray Lyman Wilbur, secretary of the interior, William D. Mitchell, attorney general, and Andrew Mellon, secretary of the treasury.

For the last year there have been rumors that Hyde was desirous of getting out of the cabinet, as the duties of secretary of agriculture have placed a severe strain on his health. There also have been reports he would become chairman of the Republican national committee, and that he planned to run for senator in Missouri next year. To his friends he has denied both reports.

Wilbur's leave of absence as president of Leland Stanford university expires this year, it is understood, but undoubtedly it will be extended. Mitchell has been reported to be considering a New York law partnership, and also has been mentioned as a possible appointee when the next Supreme court vacancy occurs.

Since Hoover entered the White House, Secretary Mellon has been reported to be preparing to resign and Henry M. Robinson of Los Angeles selected as his successor. Mellon is the only holdover of the Coolidge cabinet.



Adolf Hitler

THOSE who expected that Adolf Hitler would arise in offended might and defy the recent dictatorial decree of President Paul von Hindenburg were not fully acquainted with Hitler. The Fascists are enraged both at being suppressed and at being classed with the hated Communists as national nuisances that must be abated. There are many fiery young men among the Fascists; indeed, one is almost led to believe that the majority of them are fiery young men. A word of encouragement from their leader would doubtless be sufficient to send them on the warpath in defiance of the Presidential decree.

But Hitler gives no word of encouragement. Instead, he issues a strict and emphatic command for all Fascists to be good and to obey Hindenburg to the letter. He has announced from the start that his followers will keep strictly within the law, but that they will do all in their power to destroy or change the laws. And so now Hitler declares that he is preparing to go before the German courts with a strong argument that the Hindenburg decree is unconstitutional and ineffective.

PRACTICALLY every disaster affords a test of the heroic mold of its participants. It is heartening to reflect that the test usually is met. In no instance of tragedy in recent years has there been a better display of courage, presence of mind and intelligent action than in the Colorado school bus catastrophe, which meant the death of five children from exposure to the severe cold. All of the fifteen children who survived this terrible ordeal must have been possessed of unusual endurance; but the behavior of one alone, of thirteen-year-old Bryan Untiedt, was most heroic and admirable. It is worthy of all the attention it has attracted, including the invitation received by Bryan from President Hoover to visit the White House and the citation of his record to the Carnegie hero fund. But greater than any recognition that may come of the event is the reminder the example affords to humanity everywhere that, in spite of all its weakness and seeming helplessness at times, there is within it an element of the heroic.

PRIME MINISTER LANG, of New South Wales, in Australia, is extremely anti-English and he could scarcely have chosen a more pointed way to indicate his antipathy than by scoring the solid English virtue about paying one's bills. There was general consternation in London when recently he repudiated the payment due to be made in that city at once of interest charges amounting to $3,645,000. London's consternation has been changed to something like exultation by the announcement of Prime Minister Scullin, of the Commonwealth government, that his government would take over the New South Wales, obligation and bring suit against the state to recover.

Mr. Lang is seemingly taking a leaf from the book of some southern American states which, many years ago, were guilty of a number of repudiations.

Senator Bingham

SENATOR BINGham's remedy for "governmental extravagance" is more taxation. He would revive nuisance taxes and slap on other levies so thick that the people who are now demanding always greater government expenditures, which they fondly think some one else is paying for, would realize that some of the money is coming out of their own pockets. Then, Senator Bingham thinks, they would call a halt and taxes could be reduced.

The senator admits he realizes his proposal will be "extremely unpopular," but he thinks that at the bottom of federal, state and municipal extravagance in this country is the feeling of a large element in the electorate that when it votes taxes it votes away some one else's money. As long as that feeling exists, there is no incentive, Senator Bingham believes, on the part of those who entertain it to curb their demand for tax-breeding services.

Leaders of congress look with little favor on Mr. Bingham's proposal. He is the first, in discussions of the approaching $700,000,000 deficit, to suggest tax demands be made on smaller incomes. Some legislators said they would favor increasing the levies on bigger incomes, while leaders of both parties and in both houses have insisted greater taxes will not be necessary.

President Hoover believes an increase will not be necessary if congress restricts appropriations. Republican Leader Tilson of the house thinks an increase is not now needed and should not become mandatory.

Members of both major parties have promised to co-operate to keep down expenditures at the next session, thus eliminating a need for more money through increased taxation.

THE conviction of Albert B. Fall, secretary of the interior in the Harding administration, on a charge of accepting a bribe in the oil lease scandals, has been upheld by the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

At the same time the court sustained the conviction of Harry M. Blackmer, oil operator, for contempt of court in refusing to leave self-imposed exile in France to testify in the oil trial.

Unless the United States Supreme court permits Mr. Fall to take an appeal to its bar, the mandate of the District court will be handed down within 15 days and the former cabinet officer will be taken into custody to serve a one-year prison sentence and pay a fine of $100,000. Mr. Blackmer's sentence is a fine of $60,000.

Told of details of the court's action in upholding the one-year imprisonment and $100,000 fine assessed against him for bribery in connection with the California naval oil leases, the former secretary of the interior said his final decision in the matter of another appeal would not be made until he had received a copy of the court's opinion from his lawyers in Washington.

Mr. Fall is now in seclusion at his ranch at Three Rivers, N. M., the same ranch on which he spent $100,000 cash received in a sachel from Edward L. Doheny, wealthy oil man, almost ten years ago. Mr. Fall collapsed during his last trial and is supposed to be in feeble health.

Rear Admiral Thomas C. Hart

REAR ADMIRAL Thomas C. Hart has been appointed superintendent of the Naval academy, succeeding Rear Admiral S. S. Robison, retired. Admiral Robison has had a career of 43 years in the navy. His official retirement starts June 1, but in the meanwhile he has planned to take a vacation at his recently purchased home on the South river near Annapolis.

The regiment of midshipmen gave the retiring superintendent a round of cheers in front of his home. Regret at his passing was expressed by Maurice Hibschmann, regimental commander, and a delegation representing the Annapolis city administration and various civic organizations presented a resolution praising him for coming to the relief of the city during the severe drought of last summer.

POULTRY FACTS

FOWL POX QUITE SERIOUS DISEASE

Carried by Common Variety of Garden Mosquitoes.

Fowl pox in chickens is not chicken pox, according to Prof. Robert Matheson of the New York State college of agriculture, who explains that this troublesome poultry disease is carried by mosquitoes. Fowl pox appears as warty nodules or lesions on the comb, wattles, and skin of the heads of fowls, he says, and causes a decided lessening of egg laying. In more serious cases, it kills.

Speaking from the Cornell university radio station, Professor Matheson states that while the specific cause of the disease is unknown, investigations at the Rockefeller institute of medical research and at Cornell show that the disease is carried by mosquitoes. Whether it may be contracted in any other way has not yet been determined. Other blood-sucking insects besides marsh mosquitoes and the common garden variety of early spring mosquitoes, that hatch in April and live all summer, may carry the disease from infected poultry to the healthy ones. Apparently a mosquito which has become infected will continue to be a spreader of the disease throughout her natural life. The male mosquito is of course, harmless.

Due to the heavy losses that result from fowl pox, a reasonable precaution is to use up-to-date methods to prevent mosquitoes from breeding in the vicinity of poultry plants. Immunization against epidemics of the disease can be assured by vaccinaton, but this is expensive for the commercial poultryman, considering the present price for eggs.

Management of Turkeys Not Well Understood

Turkey management problems are probably as little understood by the average poultryman as are any of the problems connected with any of the domestic fowls. This is especially true from the time the poults are hatched until they reach a marketable age, during which time they must be carried through the summer in a manner that will enable them to reach the market in favorable season.

The first problem is that of brooding the poults. Many investigators have found that turkeys can be raised with greater success in confinement than on unlimited range, especially where chickens have been raised on the same farm. Chickens are susceptible to the cecum worm, which is host to the blackhead germ, which, in turn, is the greatest single cause of turkey losses. Because of this good management demands that poults be raised on fresh ground and away from old turkey or chicken yards or runs.

The Nebraska station gives some very valuable pointers on turkey production. Poults will thrive best if not overcrowded. One square foot of brooder space per poult is recommended. Units of over 100 are not recommended except for those who have had considerable brooding experience.

Powdered Skim Milk Is Fine for Laying Flocks

Powdered skim milk has given such good account in the rations of dairy calves that is use might well be increased in the rations of laying hen flocks. It makes a valuable protein constituent of the laying mash. It may well take part or all of the place of meat scrap. The Cornell university laying mash is composed of 100 pounds each of wheat bran, wheat middlings, yellow corn meal, ground heavy oats, and meat scrap, plus three pounds of salt and 1 per cent cod liver oil. If no liquid skim milk is fed one may well substitute 125 pounds of the powdered skim milk for the 100 pounds of meat scrap.

Where one has the liquid skim milk available from the separator on the farm it could well be used as the only source of drink, in which case the meat meal of the mash mixture could be reduced one-half.

Grain for a Hen

The amount of grain a hen will eat daily will depend upon the quantity of other feed, such as mashes or table scrap that is available. The birds should get just what they will clean up nicely without leaving any in the litter. Fresh ground bone is good for hens if not fed in excess; about half an ounce per bird per day is sufficient. Authorities do not recommend warm milk for laying hens. It is preferable to allow the milk to become sour before feeding.

Keep Houses Clean

Neglecting the removal of litter and manure is more commonly the rule than the exception during July and August. Cleaning really is very important but not entirely because of the mite situation. If the house has been painted or sprayed with an effective coal tar preparation within six months the mites should not bother. Accumulated manure breeds flies and attracts them. Flies are an ever present menace as spreaders of tapeworms a very injurious parasite.

Lesson for April 26

HOW TO PRAY

LESSON TEXT—Luke 18:1-14.

GOLDEN TEXT—And it came to pass, that, as he was praying in a certain place, when he ceased, one of his disciples said unto him, Lord, teach us to pray, as John also taught his disciples.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Teaches Us to Pray.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Teaches Us to Pray.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Is True Prayer?

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Why Pray?

I. "Men Ought Always to Pray" (v. 1).

Prayer is absolutely necessary to the spiritual life. It is to the spiritual like what breathing is to the physical life. Men ought to pray under every variety of circumstances—in times of sorrow and burdens for strength to endure, in times of joy and success for grace to behave aright. Prayer ought to be persisted in even when the answer is not immediately seen. "All men pray at times." To the Christian alone belongs faith-filled and persistent prayer.

II. The Urgent Prayer of a Widow (vv. 2-8).

The picture here is of a helpless widow who was being cheated out of her property rights, coming to a godless judge for redress. Her only means of getting help was to prove the justice of her claim by her persistence. Even this did not gain access to his heart for he feared not God nor regarded man. He complied with her request to get rid of her. The point here is not that God is like this unjust judge, that he can be teased into compliance, but rather the teaching is by contrast. If such action can be secured on the part of a godless judge by persistence, how much surer will the help of God be given to his elect who cry unto him day and night. The helpless widow pictures the church in this age suffering the deprivation of her rights. It is not the church praying for vengeance upon her enemies, but suing for the possession of her rights by virtue of her covenant relation in Christ. The inheritance of the church will be actualized at the coming of Christ. This is why the truth concerning the coming of Christ is so vital to Christianity, and why so disastrous consequences follow the loss of this blessed hope. Every prayer offered by the church will surely be answered. The apparent delay in the vindication of the church may dishearten some and cause others to mock (II Peter 3:4). Jesus' question should be a solemn warning against allowing apparent delay of the coming of the Lord to crowd out our praying. Though many may give up, we should be assured that genuine faith will abide and that the divine promise concerning the coming of Christ shall be fulfilled.

III. The Prayer of the Proud Pharisee (vv. 9-12).

1. He took a striking attitude (v. 11).

The Jewish custom was to stand while praying, but the word "stood" implies the assumption of an ostentatious position. He was self-righteous and trusted in himself.

2. He prayed with himself (vv. 11, 12).

He used the name of God, but it was really a soliloquy. He pretended to be thanking God when he was really complimenting himself—rehearsing his own goodness. His whole thought centered in himself. He congratulated himself for his morality (v. 11). He thanked God that he was not as other men are, such as extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as the publican who was standing afar off. One who has been kept from these gross sins ought to be grateful to God but should not set himself above his fellow men because of it. He congratulated himself for his religious merits (v. 12). He fasted twice a week and gave tithes of all he possessed. He thus informed God that he did more than what was required, implying that God was under obligation to him.

IV. The Prayer of the Humble Publican (v. 13).

In contrast with this supposed saint stood the publican, whose shame kept him from even looking up to heaven, beating upon his breast as a sign of anguish of soul and crying out to God to be merciful to him, a sinner.

V. Christ's Testimony (v. 14).

Christ declared that the publican went away justified rather than the Pharisee. The one great and urgent need on the part of men is the confession of sin and a willingness to cry unto God for mercy.

The Ear of God

A friend of any kind and to any extent or degree is something in this cold and lonely world, but to have a friend who has the ear of God, and who fills God's ear from time to time with our name and our cause, Oh, who shall find such a friend in me!—Alexander Whyte.

Trusting in God

Surely it is a poor creed that will only allow us to trust in God for ourselves.—George Macdonald.

IF ICHABOD CRANE HAD A FLASHLIGHT

By JOHN G. LONSDALE
President American Bankers Association

WE ALL remember the story of Ichabod Crane and the headless horseman. There was the dark form by the side of the road—thundering hoofs on the Sleepy Hollow highway—and Ichabod fleeing in confused terror before this terrible monster. If Ichabod had only known that his hobgoblin was an inventive rival disguised with a a pumpkin head, he would have had a good laugh and gone on with the business of vanquishing his competitor.

John G. Lonsdale

What Ichabod really needed was a modern flashlight. Then he would have discovered the trickery at once. Many business men need the flashlight of analysis to uncover the hobgoblins in their business and then they might sit back and laugh at their rivals who hesitate to investigate and learn the truth.

At this time, when business and banking are making strenuous efforts to have a clear vision ahead, it is especially important that the power of research and analysis be employed to their fullest extent. When these twin brothers of good management have been pressed into service in all fields, I am confident we shall see a further lessening of periods of stress. However, I believe business in general has learned the valuable lesson that any prosperity that is not leavened with a little adversity would not seem basically safe or sound.

RESERVE SYSTEM'S DIVIDENDS ANALYZED

Bankers Find Increased Payments to Member Banks Would Be Small Inducement.

Various proposals that member banks in the Federal Reserve System should participate more largely in its net earnings through an increase in the dividend rate above the present fixed 6 per cent "would be a very small financial inducement" to them, it is declared in a recent study of this subject by the Economic Policy Commission of the American Bankers Association. This is shown, the commission says, by a theoretical forecast, on the basis of the past six years, of additional earnings that would be disbursed to member banks during the next six years under two plans introduced in bills before the United States Senate.

"The Fletcher bill provides that Federal Reserve Bank earnings, after present 6 per cent dividends to members and completion of a 100 per cent surplus, should all be distributed as extra dividends to the stockholder banks," the report says. "If the earnings of each Federal Reserve bank were distributed among its own members there would be no extra dividends in the Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Chicago and San Francisco districts during the next six years, but the other six Federal Reserve Banks would pay annual extras at the following rates: Richmond, 6.08 per cent; Atlanta, 4.09 per cent; St. Louis, 3.50 per cent; Minneapolis, 9.51 per cent; Kansas City, 5.48 per cent; Dallas, 4.83 per cent.

"If the earnings were pooled and paid out to all members in all districts each member would receive an average annual extra dividend of .78 per cent. Under this plan no franchise tax as now would be paid by the Federal Reserve Banks to the Federal Government.

Another Plan Analyzed

"The Glass bill would provide that, after present 6 per cent dividends, one-half the remainder should be paid to member banks as an extra dividend with the residue going to surplus and Federal Government as franchise tax. The average annual extras to members would be as follows: Boston District, 2.51 per cent; New York, .48 per cent; Philadelphia, 2.05 per cent; Cleveland, 2.09 per cent; Richmond, 3.26 per cent; Atlanta, 4.67 per cent; Chicago, 3.20 per cent; St. Louis, 2.02 per cent; Minneapolis, 4.75 per cent; Kansas City, 2.74 per cent; Dallas, 8.31 per cent; San Francisco, 1.87 per cent.

"If these extra funds were pooled the result would be an extra average annual dividend of 1.73 per cent for each member. Under this plan the system would still pay as now an annual franchise tax, amounting to $1,941,995 on the average."

By way of concrete instance, the report says, a member bank having capital and surplus of $200,000, therefore holding Federal Reserve Bank stock amounting to $6,000 on which it is receiving $360 under the present 6 per cent dividend arrangement, would with the addition of each 1 per cent to the dividend rate receive an additional income of $60 a year.

"If each member bank will figure out for itself the dollar-and-cents gain it would enjoy we are confident it will be agreed that the gains are small as against the economic disadvantages which can be pointed out," it concludes.

BUY A POPPY FOR MEMORIAL DAY

LOCAL AUXILIARY WILL HAVE POPPIES FOR SALE MAY 23

Wearing Poppies Helps Provide War Vets With Employment

All Auxiliary and Legion members are urged to attend the joint county meeting at Britt Tuesday night. May 5. The local organization will act as host at this time but a lack of suitable rooms makes it necessary for us to use the Britt Legion rooms.

On Tuesday afternoon May 12 the Klemme Auxiliary entertains the county organization in the M. E. Church basement in Klemme. This meeting is independent of the Legion.

Next regular meeting will be held Thursday night May 14.

The Iowa Department of the American Legion Auxiliary has won the honor of being the first department in the organization to order its full quota of memorial poppies for the "Poppy Day" distribution this year, the Klemme unit has been informed from national headquarters. The Department of Nebraska was the second to order its full quota. The quotas represent an increase of ten per cent above the number of poppies sold last year.

On April 15th the Iowa Auxiliary Units had ordered a total of 462,500 small poppies and 4,400 large poppies for sale on "Poppy Day," May 23, exceeding the Department quota by more than 15,000. The Units in Nebraska had ordered 235.100 poppies, 100 more than the department quota. The total national sale of poppies this year is expected to exceed 10,500,000 meaning that more than half a million more Americans will wear the poppy in honor of the world war dead than ever before.

Early ordering of the poppies by Auxiliary Units has been urged to provide employment for the disabled veterans who make the little paper flowers. Hundreds of disabled men unable to do any other type of work have been kept busy manufacturing poppies under Auxiliary direction for several months, being paid one cent each for making the flowers and attaching the official American Legion and Auxiliary label. Their total earnngs areo expected to be more than $100,000 this year.

R. N. A. Had Shower And A Mock Wedding Monday Afternoon

The R. N. A. ladies gave a pre-nuptial shower in honor of Miss Eunice Braund, at the hall Monday afternoon. Miss Braund. accompanied by her mother and sister drove up from Williams.

The hall was appropriately decorated for the occasion and the table decorations were carried out in appropriate colors.

An arch had been built at one end of the hall and a mock wedding was put on by the ladies. The characters were as follows: Bride, Mrs. J. S. Trumbell; Groom, Mrs. C. G. Waterman; Bridesmaid, Mrs. Ed. F. Jacobs; Best Man. Mrs. Paul Stille; Minister, Mrs. Allie White; Organist, Viola Freie; Bride's father, Mrs. Lyn Drake; Flower Girl, Mrs. Ralph Ludeke; Ring Bearer, Mrs. Levi Ridder; Soloist, Mrs. Martin Barz.

Miss Braund conducted a beauty parlor in the Wellemeyer building for several years, until about a year ago when she went to Mason City to take charge of a beauty parlor.

DOINGS AT SCHOOL THE PAST WEEK

GRADE OPERETTA WAS VERY WELL ATTENDED BY P. T. A.

Teachers And Pupils Are To Be Complimented For Its Success

The grade children did their parts well in their little operetta on Tuesday eve. It has meant a lot of work for our grade teachers and possibly some of the parents to get the costumes ready for so many children and to train them for the program. But many came to hear and see the program and were interested. Miss Goll's rythmic band presented a fine appearance in their band costumes and deported themselves like little men and women. Jackie Kudje and Marjorie Lemke wielded the baton in a dignified and graceful fashion and were not in the least abashed. The piano solo by Mildred Jean Sitzer was well rendered and very pretty. Mildred has gotten a fine start on the piano and promises to become an excellent musician. The grade teachers wish to thank Mr. Patet and Miss Gracka Quandt for the help they gave in making the operetta the success that it was.

The election of officers for the P. T. A. for whom the program was rendered ended with the following in the chairs for next school year: President: Mrs. J. E. Stille;; Vice-President : Mrs. Leonard Sampson; Secretary: Miss Vola Goll; Treas: Fred Kluckhohn. These officers will do their full share for the association next year. All bills have been paid and a few dollars are in the treasury.

Next week, May 8, the Juniors will banquet the Seniors. The academic meet is also scheduled for next week and will serve in part, perhaps a large part, toward the final semester examinations. That is our teachers will give considerable credit on the semester's grades in the subject written in this meet. This test will permit a comparison with the work other schools are doing over the state of Iowa. We are anxious for our students to have a good showing.

Our baseball team won last Friday over Goodell but lost on Tuesday evening of this week to Thornton.

Miss Ford and Miss McGinnis are both busy these days with their groups on music for baccalaureate and commencement programs. The first of these will be Sunday evening May 17. and the latter on Thursday evening May 21.

Each pupil in Miss Goll's room has planted a tree sometime during the past week.

The first section of the first division convoy had brought to St. Nazaire the headquarters, the Sixteenth infantry, two battalions of the Twenty-eighth infantry, one battalion of the Fifth marines and some motor transport troops and stevedores. To see the naval vessels and transports flying the American flag in the harbor gave us all a thrill of pride. It was a pleasure to meet the naval commander, Rear Admiral Albert Gleaves, who was to have general charge of the convoy system.

The regiments of the division had all served under my command at one time or another. They were now, however, composed of a large percentage of recruits and would have to go through a long period of training. After a few days spent in the cantonment at St. Nazaire the infantry of the division was sent to the training area of Gondrecourt, north of Neufchateau, and the artillery to Valdshon, near Belfort.

Arrival "Tipped Off."

Maj. Gen. William L. Sibert, who had won distinction as an engineer in the construction of the Panama canal, was in command of the first division.

The two infantry brigades were commanded by Brig. Gens. R. L. Bullard and Omar Bundy, both of whom had many years of line service behind them. I had known all three of the general officers, as we were cadets together at the academy, although all belonged to classes ahead of mine.

It had been arranged that the regulations restricting reference to the allied armies by the press should apply to the American forces. But to my utter surprise the French and British papers, in their eagerness to let their people know that the elements of the American army had really reached France, carried full accounts of the arrival of this convoy, giving the port of debarkation, the designation of units and the number of men.

Tighten on Censorship.

The publication of this piece of news was in open contravention of the censorship rules and called for immediate steps to prevent further infractions. My vigorous protest resulted in our placing in the French press bureau an American representative, to whom all matter regarding our army was to be submitted for approval.

There is no doubt, however, that the suppression of news prevented our people from obtaining a clear and contemporaneous conception of the great and often brilliant achievements of our armies and left such knowledge to be gleaned from meager accounts by participants or from the later writing of historians. It was unfortunate that such rules had to be enforced, as otherwise much that might have been published at the time may never be known, but there was nothing else to be done without serious risk.

CHAPTER VII

As the French authorities wished to honor our national holiday they requested that some of our troops parade in Paris July 4, 1917. We were not prepared to make much of a military impression, as our men were largely recruits. But to stimulate morale the French wanted to demonstrate that the Americans were actually coming, so a battalion of the Sixteenth infantry was brought up from Saint Nazaire.

The untrained, awkward appearance of this unit, which was accepted as the cream of our regular army by the French officials, no doubt tended to confirm their belief that it would be some time before we should be able to organize an effective army.

If they could have foreseen the triumph of this same battalion at the peak of the great counter-offensive on the field of Soissons just one year later we might have been spared many delays and difficulties in carrying out our plans.

Troops Bring Joy to French.

Nevertheless, the first appearance of American combat troops in Paris brought joyful acclaim from the people. On the march the battalion was accompanied by a great crowd, many women forcing their way into the ranks and swinging along arm in arm with the men. With wreaths about their necks and flowers in their hats and on their rifles, the column had the appearance of a moving flower garden.

With only a semblance of military formation the animated throng pushed its way through avenues of people to the martial strains of the French band and the still more thrilling music of cheering voices. Many dropped on their knees in reverence as the column went by.

The battalion marched to the cemetery where the tomb of Lafayette is located. The ceremony there consisted of a few speeches, the principal speaker being Brand Whitlock, our ambassador to Belgium. I had been asked to deliver an address but had designated Col. C. E. Stanton of my staff, an old army friend and something of an orator, to speak in my place. However, I was prevailed upon to speak extemporaneously.

"Lafayette, We Are Here!"

It was on this occasion that utterance was given to an expression that could be born only of inspiration, one that will live long in history: "Lafayette, we are here!"

Many have attributed this striking utterance to me, and I have often wished it could have been mine. But I have no recollection of saying anything so splendid. I am sure those words were spoken by Colonel Stanton, and to him must go the credit for so happy and felicitous a phrase.

The parade of our troops through Paris doubtless fortified the morale of the people to a certain extent, but we all knew that eventually something very much more effective would have to be done.

The real question was whether the allies could hold out until we were ready. It was clear that no halfway measures on our part would answer and that allied hopes lay in American military assistance on a vast scale at the earliest moment.

Cables for 1,000,000 Men.

The allies thought an American force of 500,000 men the maximum that we could have in France in 1918, but in my opinion that would not be enough to meet the situation. If we could have had half a million fighting men in France in the early spring it would have been a different matter.

But looking ahead it was necessary to allow from 35 to 40 per cent for the services of supply, which would leave out of this number only approximately 300,000 fighting troops. Although this would aid, we could not be content merely to lend a helping hand but must prepare to strike a decisive blow.

While the appearance on the front of any American force was still months away, yet there was little doubt that if we could induce allied co-operation we should be able to give much greater assistance than they believed possible. Our study having confirmed the correctness of my tentative estimate made on the Baltic, I therefore cabled Washington, July 6, as follows:

"Plans should contemplate sending over at least 1,000,000 men by next May. . . . This estimate would give practically half million men for trenches. Inasmuch as question affects all allies whose common interests demand that we exert maximum military power consistent with transport problem, suggest early agreement be reached among allies which would provide requisite transportation . . . and limit sea transportation to food and military supplies and the exclusion of every kind of luxury as well as other supplies in excess of immediate needs of countries dependent upon oversea supplies."

Question of Transportation.

The question was, therefore, one of sea transportation, but so far all efforts to get the allies, especially the British, to consider giving help to bring over men and supplies had been futile. They did not seem to realize that America would be practically negligible from a military standpoint unless they could provide some shipping. Nor did they seem to appreciate that time was a vital factor.

But the spirit of full co-operation among the allies did not then exist. They seemed to regard the transportation of an American army overseas as no concern of theirs. This apparent indifference also gave further color to the suspicion that perhaps after all an American army as such was not wanted. The situation from our standpoint was grave and embarrassing, for it looked as though it might not be necessary for us to save either the allies or ourselves.

An entry in my diary notes: "Two of the Roosevelt boys, Theodore, Jr., and Archie, reported. Unable to participate himself, their father's fine spirit is represented by his sons."

CHAPTER VIII

As the details of our mission abroad developed it soon became evident that in all that pertained to the maintenance and supply of our armies as distinguished from the purely military task, men with expert knowledge and broad experience in business, industry and transportation would be needed.

In the technical branches of the army there were many officers with theoretical training in special lines, but with some notable exceptions they generally lacked broad constructive or administrative experience. From the very start I determined to obtain the best talent available, and was fortunate in practically every field to find able men who were anxious to do their part.

The earliest application of the principle was in connection with timber and lumber procurement. The call for lumber would be enormous, and since it would be impossible with our limited tonnage to bring a great quantity across the Atlantic, most of it would have to be obtained in Europe.

A cable to the War department early in July, 1917, recommended the immediate organization of a forestry service, consisting of sawmill units, to be composed of experienced lumbermen and 8,000 to 10,000 unskilled laborers to build roads and transport lumber. Special request was made for the appointment of Prof. Henry Graves, chief of the United States forestry service, who was then on the ground, as the man to take charge of this service. A number of other specially qualified men were requested as we entered the task of building up the supply service, but as this was the first intimation given to the War department that such a force would be needed naturally it was some time before it was actually at work.

Heavy Work for the Staff.

During the first two months in France the work imposed upon the few staff officers who had accompanied me was very heavy. After urgent and repeated requests I was fortunate in having at my disposal later in the summer a small group of men which included some of the most brilliant and highly educated officers in the army.

In addition to those already with me, the officers included in the following cable I regarded as especially fitted for the duties for which they were desired:

"Request Robert C. Davis, adjutant general, be sent these headquarters earliest date. Request Frank Moorman or J. O. Mauborgne be sent these headquarters earliest date for duty as code expert. Request Samuel T. Hubbard, Jr., signal corps, now here, be called to active service and ordered to report to me. Request ten of following named officers be sent to report to me by second convoy for general staff duty: Frank R. McCoy, George Van Horn Moseley, Malin Craig, Alfred W. Bjornstadt, H. B. Fiske, Allen J. Grear, Paul B. Malone, Edgar T. Collins, Samuel R. Gleaves, Laurence Halstead, Nicholas W. Campanole, A. R. Moreno, Preston Brown, LeRoy R. Eltinge, W. B. Burtt, Frank T. Hines, Edward L. King, J. P. McAdams, W. C. Sweeney, J. B. Barnes, Kerr T. Riggs, W. H. Winters, Walt C. Johnson, Stuart Heintzelman, Upton Birnie, Kirby Walker, Berkeley Enochs. . . ."

Having this nucleus and selecting the best features of the French and British systems, a general staff organization was created, which efficiently met every demand made upon it throughout the war and which remains today as a model for present and future guidance.

Source of Guns a Problem.

The question of artillery procurement caused me much concern. The almost negligible amount on hand when we went to war consisted mostly of field guns of the three-inch type, then largely in the hands of troops in the Philippine islands and elsewhere and unavailable for issue. Moreover, for calibers heavier than the three-inch type our ordnance department had adopted nothing which was really up to date.

The enormous proportion of both light and heavy guns used by both sides, the knowledge of our deficiency and the realization of the length of time that must elapse before we could manufacture and deliver them made it imperative that we seek other sources than our own to help equip our armies.

Following up an intimation it was learned definitely that, although not fully supplied themselves, the French could increase the output of their factories provided they could get steel from the United States. As it seemed probable that we should operate in proximity to their armies we adopted the French types for the usual calibers and sought their assistance in obtaining the guns needed, at least for the first two years. We secured an agreement that our troops as they came along would be provided with French guns and ammunition, including not only the 75s and 155s but 37 mm. guns and 58 mm. trench mortars as well.

It was most fortunate that we were able to get these guns from the French, as up to the end of the war no guns of American manufacture of the types used, except twenty-four 8-inch mortars and six 14-inch naval guns, were fired in battle.

Trench guns of the three-inch and six-inch mortar types, with ammunition, were purchased from the British, as they were considered superior to those used by the French.

Progress of Red Cross.

The Red Cross reported excellent progress at this time, especially in its first effort to assist the French as agreed upon with General Petain. Its organization by Maj. Grayson M. P. Murphy for war work with our own armies was now about completed. The establishment of canteens and huts at the ports and other important points had already begun and the numbers increased as fast as needed.

These centers of service later maintained dispensaries and provided beds and bathing facilities for men traveling under orders or on leave. When the necessity arose the Red Cross actively co-operated with the medical corps in the field, contributing large quantities of supplies and often additional nurses. The work of the society, directed from a central office in Paris, eventually embraced practically every endeavor touching the health of the armies.

CHAPTER IX

I left Paris July 20, 1917, for a visit with Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig, the British commander in chief, whose headquarters were in an old chateau half hidden away in a magnificent grove at Beldiques. I was accompanied by Colonels Harbord and Alvord and Captain Patton of my staff.

At dinner the subject of conversation naturally turned on the military situation of the allied armies, our own in particular. They were keen to know about our army, its organization and size, and the prospects of our putting troops in the field. As our active participation depended on many factors, such as training, equipment and shipping, my replies, of course, were indefinite and no doubt disappointing.

In turn we asked many questions, and it was especially interesting to hear the importance of artillery emphasized by its chief, Major General Birch, who spoke of the difficulties they had experienced in supplying themselves with guns that matched the enemy's.

LIVE STOCK

METHODS TO PREVENT SWEET CLOVER BLOAT

Best Plan to Feed Well Before Pasturing.

Iowa farmers suffer many losses from bloat that might be prevented, believes F. S. Wilkins, chief in forage crop investigations at Iowa state college. With the increased use of sweet clover pasture, the possibility of bloat in cattle has increased and care must be taken not to turn the cattle onto the pasture too soon. The most severe losses are found during the seasons of heaviest rainfall, and precaution must be taken in turning stock onto wet fields.

Among the best methods to prevent bloat in pasturing sweet clover and other legumes is to see that stock are well fed before they are turned onto the pasture. Some good dry roughage will aid materially in decreasing the danger of bloat.

Plenty of water should always be available since thirsty stock are likely to drink too much when they have an opportunity and this increases danger from bloat. It is a good practice to keep air-slaked lime in the water and to keep a mixture of equal parts of salt and air-slaked lime before the stock at all times. After the animals have become accustomed to the pasture, they should be kept there continuously, otherwise they will have to be carefully watched each time they are turned in to prevent bloat.

Raising Karakul Breed of Sheep Is Described

Karakul sheep, a breed raised chiefly for the production of lambskins suitable for fur, are comparatively new in this country. Only a limited number are now in the United States, and direct importations from Bokhara, their native country, are prohibited by law to prevent the introduction of disease. Farmers' Bulletin 1632-F, Karakul Sheep, just issued by the United States Department of Agriculture, gives essential information regarding this breed. The bulletin is intended chiefly for persons who contemplate raising Karakul sheep.

Lambskins produced from Karakul lambs are divided into three main classes, known commercially as broadtail, persian lamb, and caracul. Of these, broad-tail is the most valuable, but the percentage produced of this type of skin is very small, the bulletin explains. Fur skins from grade Karakul rams and grade Karakul ewes have not brought favorable prices. However, experimental work indicates that if grade ewes of the more available American type are mated with desirable pure-bred Karakul rams for successive generations, high-grade Karakul sheep can be developed whose lambs will be as satisfactory as pure-breds for the production of fur.

Push March Pigs Along for High Market Price

"It does not pay to hold back the March farrowed pigs to feed them out on new corn," says Prof. W. E. Carroll, University of Illinois. "Most farmers figure that corn is too high to feed spring pigs and consequently pay dearly for their new corn by taking a lower price." The heavy runs of the year come in the fall and winter months and generally depress the price," says Professor Carroll. "There was a difference of $1.20 in the cost of producing summer-fed and the fall-fed hogs and a market difference of $9.56 in favor of the 225-pound hog that went to market in September instead of December," Professor Carroll declares. "Thus there was a net difference of $8.36 in favor of the hog that was fed out on old corn and marketed in September."

Live Stock Notes

Probably more silage can be fed with safety after lambing than before.

A small amount of good quality clover or alfalfa hay seems to be tremendously worth while in the cattle ration.

Live stock men know that silo location affects time required to feed. Silage should not have to be hauled to distant feed bunks.

Thin, wormy lambs, known as culls, pewees and skips, arrive by the thousands on our late summer and fall markets, where they sell for several dollars less than fat, thrifty lambs of the same age and breeding.

Scrub lambs are a losing proposition. On the average they bring $4.14 less per hundred than lambs of desirable quality.

All thoroughbred race horses descend in direct male line from three stallions, the Byerly Turk, the Darley Arabian and the Godolphin Bard.

There are certain factors that have to be watched in feeding corn silage to in-lamb ewes, namely condition or quality and amount. Extreme methods are always bad

POISON in Your bowels!

Poisons absorbed into the system from souring waste in the bowels cause that dull, headachy, sluggish, bilious condition; coat the tongue, foul the breath; sap energy, strength and nerve-force. A little of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin will clear up trouble like that, gently, harmlessly, in a hurry. The difference it will make in your feelings over night will prove its merit to you.

Dr. Caldwell studied constipation for over forty-seven years. This long experience enabled him to make a prescription just what men, women, old people and children need to make their bowels help themselves. Its natural, mild, thorough action and its pleasant taste commend it to everyone. That's why "Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin," as it is called, is the most popular laxative drugstores.

Few Persons Get Full Advantage of Read

That there are several million persons in the United States beyond the age of childhood who are illiterate contradicts the statement put by Shakespeare in the mouth of Jaques berry, that "to read and write come by nature." There are other millions nominally literate, who yet read little and with such pain, that to them books are as an instrument with which they have not learned to play. Prof. Charles H. Judd, of the University of Chicago, emphasized this in speaking on adult education at the convocation of the University of the State of New York: "Until people are ready to cultivate reading they would cultivate the ability to play a musical instrument or to play golf, they will never be able to use the best sources of information with readiness and full advantage."

Reading aloud is recognized as an art, but reading to one's own self is also an art, which can be developed, as other arts, by incessant practice. If he were to give as much attention to the cultivation of reading skill as the musician gives to his art, the artisan with leisure and a library would be richer than the man whose profession or vocation leaves him no time to read swiftly and thoughtfully in the literature which is "the organ of the race mind" and whose chief function is the fusion of nations and the "enfranchisement of the soul" of the individual.—New York Times.

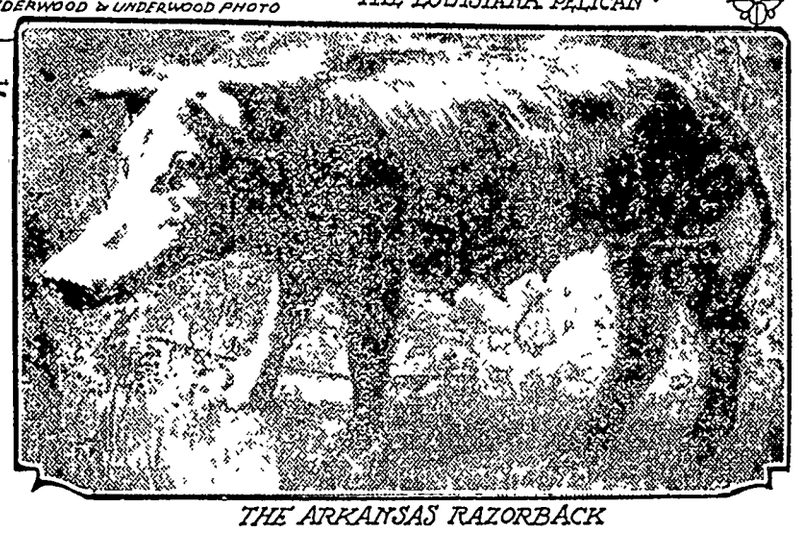
THE LOUISIANA PELICAN

WISCONSIN BADGER



THE ARKANSAS RAZORBACK

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THERE are eight states in the Union with nicknames related to birds or animals, presumably because they are so characteristic of those states that a person invariably thinks of them together. They are the following:

Arkansas, the Bear state.
Delaware, the Blue Hen state.
Iowa, the Hawkeye state.
Louisiana, the Pelican state.
Michigan, the Wolverine state.
Minnesota, the Gopher state.
Oregon, the Beaver state.
Wisconsin, the Badger state.

But it is a curious fact that in addition to every state having a popular nickname, there are some states which have symbols that are in no way connected with the nickname. If they were connected, whenever you thought of Arkansas, you would think of a bear. But the fact is that whenever you think of that state, the chances are that there rises to your mind the image of one of those lean, lanky porkers with its long snout and high, sharp backbone which gives it the name of razorback. For the razorback, descendant of the pigs which the Spanish explorer, De Soto, brought to America and which escaped to the woods and ran wild for generations, is Arkansas' native hog and as such has become that state's symbol rather than the bear.

Time was when the razorback was such a familiar figure in the Arkansas landscape that it became a part of those "popular legends" which are responsible for fixing in the public mind certain ideas, as often erroneous as not, about the people in some one state or some section of the country. Hence the tradition of the "Ozark hill-billy" whose "shiftlessness" has been perpetuated in the famous "Arkansas Traveler" story. And a similar story in which the razorback figures is this one:

Traveler Through Arkansas (observing a razorback scratching itself against a post)—Your hogs seem to be troubled with the mange.

Ozark Hill-Billy—Mange nuthin', stranger. That there is a razorback and he's just stroppin' hisself!

So while it may be true that the razorback hog was once the most distinctive domestic animal in Arkansas, modern farming and modern live stock raising in Arkansas have largely done away with him and he is more of a relic and a tradition than a living fact. The tradition has been preserved, however, by the athletic teams of the University of Arkansas which have become widely known as the "Razorbacks," especially since an Arkansas football star made the All-American.

In fact, such has been the widespread interest in college athletics in recent years that the mascots and nicknames of athletic teams, especially those of the state universities, have done much to fix in the public mind a certain state symbolism, even though it may not always agree with that suggested by the "official" state nickname. Outstanding examples of those which symbolize both the state and the college athlete are the "Wolverines" of the University of Michigan, the "Gophers" of the University of Minnesota and the "Badgers" of the University of Wisconsin.

In that connection there has come to light recently the curious paradox that in all probability Michigan, the Wolverine state, does not now have a single wild wolverine within its borders! That is the discovery that Fielding H. Yost, famous football coach and athletic director at the University of Michigan made, according to an article which appeared recently in the Detroit Free Press which says:

"When Professor Yost started out to ascertain why Michigan is known as the Wolverine state, he ran up against two printed explanations. It appears most likely that the name was given Michigan because bales of wolverine furs used to reach the New York fur market from the trading post at Sault Ste. Marie, although most of the furs were brought in from Canadian trappers and not from Michigan territory.

"'In the early days of exploration,' said Yost, 'a trading post was established at Sault Ste. Marie. Many wolverine furs were shipped to the New York market from this post. A large proportion of these furs were supplied by Canadian trappers, although Michigan had wolverines at this time. As the result of these large shipments of wolverine furs, this territory came to be associated with wolverines and eventually the state came to be known as the Wolverine state.'

"This explanation does not coincide with the theory of A. D. P. Van Buren, in volume five of the Michigan Pioneer Historical Collections published in 1884, but Dr. Norman Wood of the university museum faculty, who co-operated with Yost in his search for living wolverines in the state of Michigan, declares that the second explanation is not at all plausible.

"Van Buren's explanation holds that the appellation, Wolverine state came about as the result of an incident which occurred at the old Ten Eyck tavern at Dearborn. A party from Detroit stopped there one day and were served wolf steaks, his story relates. One of the men facetiously remarked, 'We have eaten wolves; we must have the appetites of wolverines.' The story spread, Van Buren says, and the name came to be applied to the natives of Michigan.

"Game wardens, trappers, and fur dealers were called upon to aid Yost in his attempt to learn whether the wolverine is extinct in Michigan. With two exceptions, these men supported the findings expressed by Dr. A. C. Roche, of Calumet, who wrote: 'I waited to look this matter up pretty thoroughly. I have seen practically all the game wardens and hunters in these parts and not one has ever seen a wolverine up here.'"

Mr. Yost's inquiry was made during his quest for a native Michigan wolverine to be used as a mascot for the Michigan athletic teams, a quest which was unsuccessful. True, live wolverines have been displayed at some of the big football games at Ann Arbor in recent years but they had been captured in Alaska and borrowed from the Detroit zoo for the occasion!

In contrast to the "Wolverines," the "Gophers," the "Badgers" and the "Hawkeyes" which symbolize the state, its inhabitants and its university teams, there are states in which all three are vastly different. South Dakota is the Sunshine state but it has an animal symbol—the coyote—and South Dakotans and the athletes of its state university are known as "Coyotes." Louisiana is the Pelican state but its inhabitants are more widely known as "Creoles" than they are as "Pelicans." For the chances are that mention of the latter word, instead of painting a word picture of a state, will more likely result in there being quoted the famous jingle about:

A wonderful bird is the pelican
Its neck holds more than its belican;
It can hold in its beak enough food for a week
But I don't see how the helican.

The largest state in the Union is called the Lone Star state but it has a symbol which never fails to bring to mind instantly the name of Texas. "Kicked like a Texas steer" and "wild as a Texas longhorn" are similes which are a part of our everyday language, so the ideas of Texas and longhorn steer are inseparably linked. It is wholly appropriate that this animal should be the symbol of Texas for upon the vast cattle trade which began after the Civil war was Texas' present prosperity based.

If you don't say "kicked like a Texas steer" then you probably say "kicked like a Missouri mule" and every one knows of the dynamite that is concealed in the heels of that animal. Which brings up the fact that Missouri, the Show Me state, is blessed with not just one state symbol but two and either one of them as surely spells "Missouri" in the mind of the average American as longhorn steer spells "Texas." One of them is the mule and the other is the houn' dog.

Not only is Missouri famous for the number of its houn' dogs, and their high value for hunting purposes, but there are two other reasons for the association of the words "Missouri" and houn' dog." One is the famous oration delivered by a famous Missourian—Senator Vest's "Eulogy on the Dog"—delivered during a lawsuit over the killing of "Old Drum." The other is the famous Houn' Dog song, "They Gotta Quit Kickin' My Dog Aroun'," which played an important part in the campaign for the nomination for President of another famous Missourian, Champ Clark.

Senator Vest's oration, which has become a classic in American literature, not only immortalized the Missouri houn' dog but has become a veritable monument to "man's best friend."

Lesson for May 3

JESUS IN THE HOME OF ZACCHAEUS

LESSON TEXT—Luke 19:1-10.

GOLDEN TEXT—For the Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Makes a Bad Man Good.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Makes Zacchaeus Want to Do Right.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Beginning a New Life.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Repentance and Restitution.

I. Jesus Passing Through Jericho (v. 1).

Jericho is noted as a stronghold of the Canaanites which was miraculously delivered into the hands of Israel in response to their faith, Joshua 6, and also for the faith of Rahab which saved her from destruction with the city Heb. (11:31). Two notorious sinners, Rahab and Zacchaeus, were saved at Jericho.

II. Zacchaeus Seeking Jesus (vv. 2-4).

1. His object (v. 3).

He sought to see who Jesus was. He doubtless had heard of Jesus' kind treatment of publicans, so was prompted to see what kind of a man he was.

2. His difficulties (vv. 2, 3).

(1) His infamous business (v. 2).

He was a tax collector of the Roman government. The very fact that a Jew held such an office under the hated Romans would make him extremely unpopular. Then, since he was rich, it was evident that he had practiced extortion in collecting taxes. By virtue of his traitorous act in accepting such an office from the Romans and his extortion in collecting taxes, he was ostracized from society. Many men have a hard time in coming to Christ because of their unpopular business relations.

(2) His shortness of stature (v. 3).

He was too small to crowd his way through to Jesus, and being hated by the people, they had thrust him aside, no doubt, with taunts and jeers.

3. His persistence (v. 4).

He ran before the multitude and climbed up into a tree. What he lacked in stature he was determined should be made up by the height of the tree. Zacchaeus seems to have been of that temperament which knows no defeat. The obstacles placed before him he brushed aside; those he could not brush aside he climbed over, his heart set upon the goal.

III. Jesus Finding Zacchaeus (vv. 5, 6).

While Zacchaeus was trying to see Jesus, Jesus was looking for him. This is always the case, when desire is stirred up in a heart to see Jesus, Jesus is seeking that one. When Jesus saw him he commanded him to come down from the tree and declared his intention to go home with him. Jesus called him by name, but did not utter a word which would humiliate Zacchaeus. Jesus knew his heart's desire and dealt with him accordingly. All souls who earnestly seek Jesus shall be found of him. Zacchaeus quickly responded. He came down, and with joy received Jesus. He acted wisely in that he did not hesitate. A moment's indecision and waiting would have kept Zacchaeus from Jesus—from Jesus and salvation.

IV. Zacchaeus' Conversion (vv. 7-10).

His conversion was sudden and thorough. He was converted before he reached the ground.

1. What the crowd said (v. 7).

They said just what they say today when sinners come to Christ. They call to mind the man's former sins. They also reproached Christ saying that he had gone to be a guest with this notorious extortioner, the tax collector. That for which they reproached Jesus was his glory. His supreme mission was to save sinners (v. 10).

2. What Zacchaeus said (v. 8).

His conversion was thorough. It took hold upon his heart. His new life was begun with resolution and restitution. He dedicated half of his goods to the poor. The man who a little while ago was a grafter was now a generous giver. His conversion got hold of his pocketbook. His determination to make restitution wherein he had wrongly exacted taxes shows the genuineness of his conversion. While God forgets the past of the sinner when he comes to Christ, the sinner who is converted will seek to make right all wrongs, be they unkind words or unrighteous deeds. Sorrow for sin is not enough when restitution is possible.

3. What Jesus said (vv. 9, 10).

"Today is salvation come to thy house." The publican was now a child of God, a son of Abraham. Salvation is a present reality to those who receive Jesus Christ.

Poland's Woman Warriors

Compulsory military service for women will be established in Poland if the women M. P.'s of that country have their way. They are bringing in legislation to introduce conscription for women. The scheme provides for the formation of a special women's army, in which girls will be required to serve when they attain the age of eighteen. The service period is to be 18 months. In the event of war, the women who have passed through this force will form a special military reserve. Various duties connected with social work and public health are to be entrusted to this woman's army, and it will probably be organized and trained rather on the lines of the British wartime women's army auxiliary corps. But women have also taken part in actual fighting as combatant troops.—Montreal Herald.

Airplanes and Automobiles

There are now more than 8,000 airplanes in use in the United States—just as many planes as there were automobiles in this country 30 years ago. There is food for thought in this statement when it is realized that 25,000,000 trucks and cars are being driven in this country today.

BUSINESS PITFALLS IN FARM DISTRICTS

Bankers Point Out Hazards of Unsound Practices and Help Farmers to Avoid Them.

WAYS in which bankers may discourage unsound farm practices are described by President F. D. Farrell of the Kansas State Agricultural College in the American Bankers Association Journal. He says:

"In Kansas in connection with the importation of dairy cattle, a large shipment of very inferior animals came into a county to be sold at auction to local farmers. The county agricultural agent informed the bankers that the cattle would be a detriment to the community. The bankers refused to finance the purchase of the cattle and the sale was abandoned. The cattle were shipped to another county. The county agent and the bankers there did as was done in the first instance and the second county escaped.

"A year ago creamery promoters began trying to capitalize the Kansas farmers' desire to improve his markets by inducing communities of farmers to purchase creamery plants before production and local conditions justified them. Informed of this by the State Agricultural College, the bankers association sent warnings to every bank in the state, leading many to refuse to support the creamery promoters until the college approved the plant for the community concerned. This saved many communities loss from the premature establishment of plants.

"A third way bankers can discourage unsound practices is to refuse to finance farmers who wish to pyramid their enterprises, a temptation difficult to resist. This is illustrated among farmers who buy cattle for feeding purposes. A farmer feeds two or three cars of cattle one year and makes a good profit. This induces him to buy twice or three times as many the second year, still more the third and so on until he finally loses more by having too many cattle on feed in a year of bad prices than he made in several previous years with smaller numbers and better prices. When bankers discourage bad practices their action is a positive benefit to the farmers concerned."

WHAT A KEY BANKER DID FOR HIS COUNTY

The farmers of one county in Tennessee are receiving $400,000 additional annual income from new farm enterprises started since 1926 through the efforts of a "key banker" and the county agent, according to estimates from the Tennessee College of Agriculture. A "key banker" is a part of the state bankers' association voluntary field force cooperating with the American Bankers Association in its nation-wide plan for bringing about better agricultural conditions through combined banker-farmer effort. New projects started in this particular county are tobacco, Irish potato and cabbage production for cash crops, and dairying and poultry raising for livestock.

The key banker, looking for something to do to better his community, first attempted to procure a county agent but was unable to get the county to make the necessary appropriation, so he and other leading citizens made up the requisite funds through private subscription among farmers and business men and an agent was employed.

Up until 1926 grain was the principal farm production in the county. The banker recognized the disadvantages of this. It afforded a low cash income, and the land was too hilly and rough for profitable grain raising. His idea was to introduce cash crops that offered more return per acre and were better fitted to the county. It was decided that the county should standardize on the Green Mountain potato and to market it in carload lots. Through his bank he sponsored the buying of a car of certified seed potatoes. He likewise bought some high quality tobacco seed and several hundred settings of purebred eggs. These supplies were distributed at cost through the banks to the farmers.

After considerable effort a market for dairy products was assured the farmers when in 1928 a national cheese company located a factory there. A county appropriation was secured for county agent work in 1928.

In 1929 the cash crop program resulted in farmers selling $45,000 worth of milk, $150,000 worth of tobacco and fifty-five carloads of potatoes and cabbage, mostly through cooperative sales. "This was some step from the $25,000 worth of cash crops in 1926," the county agent says, "and indications are that this amount will be doubled."

Steers finished on grass alone yield poorer quality meat than the ones fed some grain along with the grass.

Face of Dead Empress Reproduced on Carpet

Of all the carpets in creation, the most famous in that known as the Mumtaz Mahal carpet, which was made to order at the earnest desire of Shah Jehan, says an article in the Illustrated Weekly of India. Soon after the untimely death of the beloved empress, Shah Jehan commissioned his court painter to reproduce her likeness from his memory. The emperor was not satisfied with the painting and so contemplated having the likeness of his dearly loved wife reproduced on a carpet. He himself drew a rough sketch of the design meant for this carpet. The weavers came from Persia; the materials for the carpet were also imported from that country. The most rigid secrecy in the execution of this project was necessary lest the religious prejudices of the orthodox subjects be aggravated.

The Taj or the Mumtaz Mahal carpet measures 20 feet by 20 feet and contains 57,000,000 knots. It took 20 years for its accomplishment. The likeness of the empress was reproduced on this carpet and also that of the principal members of her family.

Ancient English Bridge Credited to Evil One

Tradition credits the devil with the construction of Tarr steps, a prehistoric "clapper" bridge which crosses the River Barle in a remote part of Exmoor, and said to be the largest and probably the oldest of its kind in Britain.

The legend says that it was built in a single night, and the devil, reserving the right of way exclusively to himself, proclaimed that he would destroy the first living thing that attempted to cross.

A holy man, who dared to flaunt the evil one, cunningly sent a cat first across the bridge, whereupon the unfortunate animal was torn to pieces. The spell was broken and the holy man took possession.

Whatever the origin, the bridge is of wonderful construction, considering it was built in an age when mechanical power was unknown. It measures 120 feet across, and has 17 spans, resting on piers of unhewn stones piled one on another. Not an atom of cement was used in the whole structure! —London Tit-Bits.

Labor First

An Episcopal missionary in Minnesota visited one of the outlying districts in his territory for the purpose of conducting prayer. He inquired of the lady of the largest house there if he might hold the services in her home. Not being noted for her great piety, she murmured something about:

"Going out to see about it."

Going out to see what detained her after a long wait, the missionary found the men busy. He went up and said:

"Aren't you coming in? Don't you care anything about your souls?"

"Souls?" asked the head of the family, slowly. "We bane na got time for heem, when the bees they swarm." —Pathfinder Magazine.

Loved 'Em All

The second grade teacher was seated at her desk. Up came a little girl with a note which read, "I love you," signed Carl A——. Another girl ran up with a note just like it.

The teacher stood up, saying: "All the children who received notes bring them to me." It seemed as if the whole school arose as 28 little girls came forward with notes, all reading: "I love you. Carl A——."

"Why did you write to every girl in the room, Carl?" the teacher asked.

By this time the little fellow was crying, but blurted out: "I just loved them all, and I thought they ought to know it."

Measuring Moonlight

We grumble at our constant changes in temperature, yet on the moon the noon temperature is hotter than boiling water, and at night it freezes solidly in the deadliest cold imaginable, about 458 degrees below zero. This is because the moon does not retain heat, throwing the sun's rays back into space, like a mirror reflects light.

These facts have been revealed by an instrument invented recently. It is so sensitive that it even measures the heat of moonlight when it reaches the earth, so small a fraction of a degree that it can hardly be imagined.

Tha Poker Faces

When Dillon, Read & Co. refused that $100,000,000 loan to Germany some one revived an old story of Clarence Dillon's proficiency at poker. He will—or at least he would at one time—when the betting had grown two-handed and fairly stiff, show his hand to the company:

"Do you think that's good enough to call on?"

Then he watched the faces of his adversary and others. Uusually he found out what he wanted to know.—Boston Globe.

Why Not

Little Helen was sitting on Uncle Charlie's lap. He had been entertaining her, as uncles sometimes do, by drawing pictures for her.

"Now, Uncle Charlie, draw me a dish of mashed potatoes."

"Child," he laughed, "I can't draw that."

Helen looked quickly up at him, saying: "I don't see why. You know what they are. You have eaten them at our house, haven't you?"

Millions of Hours Lost by Disabling Illnesses

On an average, each person in the country has at least one disabling illness every year, the committee on the "cost of medical care" has reported after a survey of various sickness reports compiled by the United States public health service and other organizations.

Men have a disabling sickness about once a year, women about twice and children over twice during the school year. Colds, bronchitis, grippe, influenza and pneumonia are oftenest the cause of these disabling illnesses and cause the longest disability. On the same basis of the number of cases and total time lost, digestive disorders and diseases also take a high place.

About 130,000,000 cases of disabling illnesses occur in the United States each year. Adding nondisabling illnesses more than doubles the figure, the committee reported. The 86,000,000 wage earners in the country lose at least 250,000,000 work days a year, and the 24,000,000 school children lose 170,000,000 school days a year. These figures account for only one-half of the total population.—Kansas City Star's Science Service.

Early Postal Records Destroyed by Flames

The first 60 years of American postal history are almost a complete blank because of the great fire of 1830, which destroyed the Post Office building at Washington and with it almost every vestige of postal records. Years later a postmaster general was forced to admit to congress that he was unable to supply the names of assistant postmasters general who had served from the beginning of the system.

One volume alone was saved from the flames by a youthful messenger in the office of the auditor of the treasury for the Post Office department. This book, still in existence and now under control of the chief clerk of the Post Office department, is a ledger of postal revenues for the years 1776, 1777 and 1778. So far as is known, no other postal records of the early years are in existence.—Detroit News.

Pepper Production

Black and white pepper comes from southern India, Sumatra, Java, Ceylon, Siam, Borneo, Penang and other parts of the Malay peninsula. Black pepper consists of the dried immature berries of a perennial climbing shrub called Piper Migrum, native to the forests of western and southern India. White pepper is practically the same product as black pepper except that the outer shell of the berry is removed to a greater or less extent by friction following soaking in water. Red pepper is the powdered ripe pod, both flesh and seeds of any variety of capsicum, the plant which gives us the edible fresh pepper, but which bears no relation to the true pepper plant. Cayenne pepper is, by ruling of the board of food and drug inspection of 1906, distinguished from red pepper as being obtained only from small-fruited varieties of capsicum.

Tiger China's King of Beasts

To the Chinese the tiger, not the lion, is the king of beasts. From childhood they are taught to fear the tiger, and he is made the bugaboo to frighten youngsters. If they are naughty they are told that the "lao-hu" (tiger) will catch them. Paper tigers are pasted over doors in China, so that the evil spirits, seeing the beast, will flee away.

The Chinese have great faith in tiger bones, claws and sinews as medicine. Since the tiger is so strong, they say, medicine made of him must make one strong. Traveling medicine men with tiger skins stretched on their poles as signboards rarely wait long for purchasers of their wares.—New York Times.

Franklin's Precocity

It was in 1772 that Benjamin Franklin tried his hand at journalism for the first time, writes Nathan G. Goodman in the Baltimore Sun. Without their being identified he slipped articles into the Courant under the name of "Mrs. Silence Dogood." Parading behind the mask of a shrewd middle-nged widow this sixteen-year-old boy carried on a moral and intellectual crusade, including an attack on "scollars" at Harvard college. Already Franklin knew how to mix light, amusing observations in serious discussions without falling into burlesque, and he avoided bitterness.

Old, but Apt Phrase

Few phrases are more apt than "All his geese are swans," which has come down to us through more than 300 years, and which we understand to be practically synonymous with the line "He is prone to exaggerate."

Like so many other idioms now a solid part of our daily conversation, this one was originally found in a book now considered a classic.

It was first used in none other than the famous "Anatomy of Melancholia," by Robert Burton, over three centuries ago.—Kansas City Times.

How to Live Long

The trouble with the rules for longevity suggested by centenarians is that they are contradictory. Their habits of life differ. All they seem to have in common are sound constitutions and a good deal of luck.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

While House Cleaning Is On

—or just before starting would be a good time to have the carpenters put in that needed Oak Floor, Built-in-Cupboard, Breakfast Nook or Inclosed Porck.

The item of Millwork is the lowest since 1918 and it would surprise you how little it would cost to inclose a porch, or make the few needed additions in the house.

What About The Roofs!

SHINGLES are the best all around roof covering on the market today, price considered. SHINGLES are the lowest in price in the history of the SHINGLE Industry. A very good B. C. Alfonso of Spain Surrenders Power, but Does Not Abdicate—Illinois Governor Vetoes "Wet" Bill—Nicholas Longworth Buried.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

Ex-King Alfonso

AS KING ALfonso and members of the royal family scattered into exile, leaders of the Spanish republic moved to insure the life of the new regime and to make royalty's return to Spain impossible.

The prison gates of Barcelona, Valencia, Jaca and other cities were opened for thousands of political and revolutionary hostages incarcerated during the dictatorships of the last eight years, while crowds boisterously celebrated the death of the monarchy and the birth of the republic.

Don Niceto Alcala Zamora, provisional president of Spain, at once assumed power.

Born on May 17, 1886, six months after the death of his father, Alfonso XII, Alfonso XIII automatically became the king of Spain. His mother, Queen Maria Christina, was appointed regent and ruled the country as sovereign until Alfonso became sixteen, when, according to Spanish constitutional law, he reached his majority and came into his full kingship.

Alfonso made no bluff of abdicating in favor of his son. The kingdom of Spain is at an end. And Alfonso, by yielding without bloodshed, won for himself a unique honor. He did not have to take to his heels and scamper for his life. He went out of Spain in a dignified way, a man who feels that he has served his nation well and who knows himself worthy of this last mark of consideration.

It will be interesting to watch the developments in Madrid during the next few weeks, for the trend in government on the continent of Europe has not been wholly a victory for present-day democracy. In certain countries, notably France, a republican government has functioned with admirable stability. In others the tendency has been toward dictatorships.

And the chief difference between a monarchy and a dictatorship is that individual ability and dominance, rather than accident of birth, bring about the selection of the ruler.

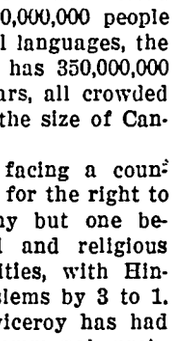
IN ASSUMING his duties as viceroy to India, Lord Willingdon finds the country vastly more complex and infinitely more difficult to deal with than was the Dominion of Canada. Instead of having to handle 10,000,000 people with only two principal languages, the new governor general has 350,000,000 speaking 222 vernaculars, all crowded in a space about half the size of Canada.

Lord Willingdon is facing a country not only clamoring for the right to shape her own destiny but one beset with acute racial and religious cleavages and animosities, with Hindus outnumbering Moslems by 3 to 1.

To be sure, every viceroy has had this Moslem-Hindu communal problem to struggle with. Observers in India say it will always exist, as long as the Hindu worships the cow and the Moslem eats it, for it is the so-called desecration of this animal that causes most race riots.

One of the few bright spots Lord Willingdon will find is that the Nationalists are now at peace with the British government. But how long this will last depends on what measure of independence Gandhi secures when he goes to the second "round table" conference in London this summer.

If increased remuneration and honors are any compensation for the trials he must face, Lord Willingdon may find some satisfaction in the fact that his $50,000 salary as governor general of Canada is doubled and his expense allowance quadrupled.



Mrs. Longworth

THE funeral of Nicholas Longworth at Cincinnati was attended by notable men from all parts of the United States, all of them warm friends of the late speaker of the house of representatives. President Hoover laid aside pressing public duties to do honor to the memory of Mr. Longworth. Affectionate tributes from all parts of the world laid stress upon his attractive personality. These expressions, and the high esteem manifested by the public and through the press, are a rich legacy of comfort to his family.

Mr. Longworth's death has, of course, completely changed the course of events in the house. A struggle for the speakership would have occurred in any event, but it was taken for granted that Mr. Longworth would command all the votes of his party and thus hold an even chance of winning the speakership. The Republicans must now choose a candidate for speaker, and he will face the difficult task of consolidating the entire party. Although a few Republicans had threatened to bolt, "Nick" Longworth's personal popularity was such that a solid party vote was confidently expected to appear when needed. Now the would-be bolters may not be drawn into line by personal affection for the party leader.

Archie Roosevelt, brother of Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, said that his sister "has never and will not seek political office."

Roosevelt made this statement at the Longworth home and added that "my sister will of course go back to Washington where she has a residence but Cincinnati is her home and she intends to make it such in the future."

Further than this, he said, Mrs. Longworth has no future plans.

This would seem definitely to set at rest rumors that Mrs. Longworth would be a candidate for her late husband's seat in congress.

Gov. L. L. Emmerson

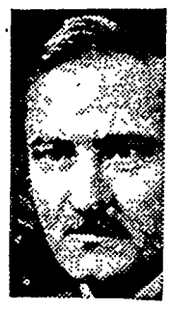
GOV. LOUIS L. Emmerson, contrary to expectations, vetoed the bill for the repeal of the Illinois search and seizure laws. The measure, which would have placed Illinois sixth in the column of states repealing their prohibition enforcement acts, had been enacted by the state senate by only a two-vote margin, 26 to 24.

The vote for it in the house had been 91 to 56. Several of those who voted for repeal in the senate, where the turn of two votes would have changed the vote, frankly admitted they voted for it only because of the referendum, by which the voters of Illinois, by a large majority, expressed their approval of repeal.

Governor Emmerson, however, left the way open for alterations in the repealer, which he said would cause it to meet with his approval.

He declared in his veto message that if the repealer had continued a referendum provision "so that the people of the state, with the full knowledge of the consequences, could vote on wiping out all state liquor legislation without regard to the Constitution of the United States, I should feel compelled to sign the bill."

The governor asserted that the efforts of Illinois "wets" to strike all prohibition laws from the statute books was nullificationism.



James C. Stone

CHAIRMAN JAMES C. Stone of the federal farm board said in a recent statement that Russian activities in the dumping of wheat "were largely responsible for demoralizing the world market and necessitating a renewal of the wheat stabilization operations the middle of last November to prevent further effects of that collapse from being felt in our own market." That is to say, the dumping of Russian wheat into the markets of Europe at any price it would bring was largely the cause of that great accumulation of wheat in storage which now embarrasses the board and the market. That Russia was the main cause of that calamitous slump in wheat last November is a fact that is not questioned by responsible authorities anywhere in the world.

Yet little or none of this wheat came to America. The tariff on wheat is practically prohibitive, even for Russia. And we can if we wish effectively prevent the entry of any Russian products. That, however, will not enable us to escape the consequences of Russia's prodigious economic program, the most extensive and the most audacious economic experiment in the world's history. It need not touch us directly at any point but we cannot escape it. Russia is in a position to make the price in the world market, and it will not be a profitable price.

Much the same situation is developing in relation to lumber and oil. Russia has a larger area of useful timber than any country in the world and as fast as it can, by forced labor, it is turning that timber into lumber in order to realize cash or credit on it from its sales in the markets of the world. The effect on lumber prices must be similar to that on wheat.

The world of the established order has never been confronted by such an economic menace as Russia now presents, not to speak of its social and political menace.

IN THE federal court at Evansville, Ind., Harry E. Rowbottom, former representative in congress of the First Indiana district, was convicted of accepting bribes from persons who sought post office appointments.

The former congressman was sentenced immediately by Judge Charles E. Woodward to serve one year and one day in Leavenworth penitentiary and was fined $2,000.

In refusing a request to have the defendant placed on probation because of his physical condition and on the grounds that others involved in the post office deals were not indicted, Judge Woodward said: "Respect for public office is lessened if they may be bought and sold. The offense of which this defendant has been found guilty is grave. I do not deem it necessary to impose the extreme penalty but the sentence must be of such a nature as to deter other congressmen from such practices."

The ex-congressman, testifying as a witness, told of receiving money from job seekers, but insisted it came to him with expressions of sympathy over his unsuccessful campaign for re-election last November.

Secretary Adams

SECRETARY OF the Navy Adams ordered the cruiser Memphis from Guantanamo, Cuba, to a position near Nicaraguan waters for use if the rebel movement in Nicaragua should become serious.

The gunboat Asheville also started up the east coast of Central America from the Canal Zone.

Advices received at Panama City by officials of the Standard Fruit Steamship company at Cristobal said three United States marines were killed in an attack by a large force of bandits on the commissary at Logtown, Nicaragua, seven miles from Puerto Cabezas. Puerto Cabezas is on the northeastern coast of Nicaragua.

The three marines listed as killed in the reports to the steamship company were Capt. Harlan Pefley, Lieutenant Darrah and Sergeant Taylor. Several native employees of the commissary also were killed, the report said.

Rev. Karl Bergener of Watertown, Wis., a Moravian missionary in the Prinzapolka district, was reliably reported killed when Cape Gracias a Dios was captured by insurgents. Other American residents of Cape Gracias a Dios include Albert and Edwin Fagot of New Orleans, and William J. Green of Allegheny, Pa.

RUTH NICHOLS, Rye (N. Y.) aviatrix, set a new speed record for women over a three-kilometer course at Detroit (slightly less than two miles) with a speed of 210.685 miles an hour. Amelia Earhart Putnam held the previous record of 181.157 miles an hour.

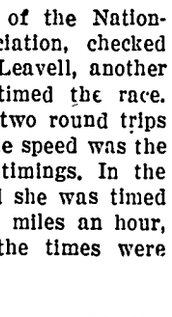
Miss Nichols flew the Lockhead-Vega plane in which she set a woman's altitude record in March, over an official course laid out near the flying field.

Harry H. Knepper of the National Aeronautical association, checked the flight, and R. A. Leavell, another aeronautical official, timed the race.

Miss Nichols made two round trips over the course and the speed was the average of the four timings. In the trips against the wind she was timed at 191.036 and 202.814 miles an hour, and with the wind the times were 221.825 and 226.880.

PROHIBITION DIRECTOR WOODcock announced a new high peak in federal prohibition enforcement for the month of March, with more arrests and more automobiles seized than in any similar period since July. He declared it was "the best month the bureau has had since I took office nearly a year ago. Nothwithstanding the increased activity the courts more than kept up with us. There were 23,583 cases on the docket at the end of February and only 21,548 on April 1.

"Further," he claimed, "we have established a definite trend in these figures showing that the average of fines is steadily decreasing while the average of jail sentences has been steadily increasing in the nine months since prohibition enforcement was transferred from the Treasury to the Justice department."



Aristide Briand

A DANGEROUSLY complicated situation has arisen in the political situation developing in Europe, especially in connection with the Austro-German tariff union and the forthcoming visit of the German chancellor and foreign minister to London for conferences with British government leaders.

Behind the official silence in various capitals many French observers saw important issues centering in the tariff agreement and in the Franco-Italian naval accord, which it was said France is attempting to drop because the government was never fully convinced that it was profitable.

France desires to remain on friendly terms with Britain, because Foreign Minister Aristide Briand has asked the British foreign secretary, Arthur Henderson, to use pressure on Germany to modify the tariff accord when the German chancellor goes to England next month.

Briand has been placed in an exceedingly embarrassing position because of the possibility that he will be elected President of the republic in May, while he would prefer to conclude the naval accord with Italy by continuing his work at the Quai d'Orsay.

TALES... of the TRIBES

By EDITHA L. WATSON

The Natchez

East of the present city of Natchez, along St. Catherine's creek, once stood nine scattered villages, comprising the tribe from which the city is named. When they first were visited by the French in 1682, there were about 6,000 Natchez—a good-sized nation. Their strange customs attracted and amused the Frenchmen, and it is to these early chroniclers that we are indebted for most of our information.

Natchez.

It was impossible for the two races, so totally unlike each other, to remain on friendly terms, and the Natchez fought three wars with the French, the last being in 1729, which turned out to be fatal to the tribe. They split into three divisions, one of which remained near their old home. The second fled a short distance away, where, in 1731, the French again attacked them, killed many, and sold about 450 into slavery. The third and largest division joined the Chickasaw and built a village near them. Later, some of the Natchez moved into the Cherokee country, and some few survivors of the tribe are still to be found in Oklahoma.

In the early colorful days, during times of peace, the French historians found the Natchez a source of great interest. The people were tall, robust, and with a proud air; neat and agreeable. Tattooing was freely indulged in, and when a Natchez man had gained some honor or distinction, he added to his tattooed decorations, so that some of them were "inscribed" over a large area of skin. The women pierced their ears with great slits and hung ornaments in them until the lobes were greatly distended, and both men and women were partial to paint, vermilion being the most prized.

One of their less attractive customs was that of head-flattening, and the old accounts describe a baby being thus deformed: it was placed on a board, and a mass of clay was tightly bound on its head between two other boards. The poor baby cried in pain, and turned almost black, but it had to endure the pressure until its head grew into the required shape. This naturally took some time, but it is not recorded that the process had any lasting ill-effect on the Natchez children, who were bright and compared favorably with those of other tribes.

The Natchez made very good pottery and spun thread from mulberry bark, which they wove into cloth. Sometimes this cloth was covered all over with feathers; small turkey feathers being used for the common people, and swan feathers for the "aristocracy."

An aristocracy in an Indian tribe, especially one which practiced head-flattening like the savages of Africa! It is an amusing idea, of course, but the fact is that the social organization of the Natchez is the most interesting point in their story. The chiefs were called Suns, and were believed to be descended from that luminary. The next in importance were the Nobles, then the Honored class; the commoners comprised the fourth division.

Descent was reckoned on the female side of the family, as in some other tribes. A Sun's boys were still called Suns, but their children were Nobles, the children of Nobles were of the Honored class, and the children of these became commoners. On the other hand, the daughters, grand-daughters, etc., of the Sun were always of the Sun class. They were obliged, however, to marry commoner men, so that their children were of Sun blood on one hand and of the lowest class on the other.

The Natchez temple was another item of interest. It stood on a mound of earth opposite the cabin of the great Sun, which was also raised on a mound. The temple was about 30 feet square, with a door to the east, but no windows, and on the roof were three birds carved from wood. A partition divided the temple on the southern side, and in the larger room was a fire, kept always burning, by pushing logs into it from three directions. Back of this was a table on which stood a basket containing bones of the last great Sun. Other baskets and some wooden images were also seen by the curious Frenchmen, who had pried into everything, and they relate that the inner room contained a stone idol.

It has been many years since the eternal fire blazed in the Natchez temple, and the idol has vanished into the obscurity of the past. There are but a few Natchez living now, far from the scenes of their tribal glory. The French came and have gone, and the Stars and Stripes float where the smoke from Indian fires once drifted. Soon the Natchez will be a memory—only the name of a city will remain, which will convey nothing of the Indians who once bore it, to the modern mind. Only the student of race-history, delving into ancient tales of still more ancient tribes, will read and be interested, or amused, or touched, according to his bent.

There is a moral here for philosophers.

POULTRY

WEATHER AFFECTS POULTRY FEEDING

Causes Vitamin A Lack in Ration—Reduces Worms.

Good feeding of poultry during lean income years is fully as important as in years of good egg and poultry prices, asserts C. M. Ferguson, extension specialist in poultry for the Ohio State university.

Shifting about of rations because of dry weather, and dry weather itself, has raised two problems with which poultrymen ordinarily do not meet, he says. One is vitamin A deficiency in the ration and the second is the reduction in roundworm infestation.

Absence of green feed and the substitution of wheat for yellow corn in the poultry ration may bring about this vitamin deficiency, unless vitamin A is supplied in some other way, explains Ferguson. Wheat doesn't contain it and yellow corn does. Its lack leads to nutritional roup, he says.

To make up for this deficiency in the diet Ferguson recommends the feeding of alfalfa and soy bean hay, or alfalfa leaf meal. As much hay can be fed as the birds will consume, but if the leaf meal is used about 6 to 8 per cent of the ration is quantity enough, he declares.

Roundworms, on account of the hot, dry weather, are not as numerous as usual, although the weather had little or no effect on tapeworms, Ferguson says. Before starting treatment for worms he recommends that a poultryman get an absolute diagnosis this year. Treatment for worms is discussed in Ferguson's latest bulletin, Poultry Parasites and Their Control, which may be obtained from the office of agricultural publications at the university.

Early Poultry Culling Pays Well in Two Ways

The typical hen usually lays the greatest number of eggs in the first or pullet year, says Prof. L. M. Hurd of the New York State College of Agriculture. High-producing hens may be profitable kept as layers for two or three years, and as breeders even longer. But every flock, no matter how well bred it is, has some hens in it that do not pay for their keep.

On the typical farm 40 per cent of the birds stop laying betwen June 15 and September 1. If the culls are removed during this period rather than after October 1, about one-and-a-half tons of feed will be saved on a flock of 1,000 birds, or about ten cents on the average for each bird in the flock.

In addition, early culling pays because more money is received to the pound, according to Professor Hurd. The price of Leghorn fowls is usually higher during July and August than it is after the first of October. The average top price for the eight years, 1922 to 1929, was June, 25.9c; July, 25c; August, 24.1c; September, 23.8c; October, 22c.

Poultry Hints

Chicks that were brooded in small houses have outgrown their home by summer.

Geese need protection from the extremely hot sun. If plenty of shade is available, no housing will be required.

Many poultrymen fail to realize the amount of harm mites cause poultry, because they are never found on the birds during the daytime.

For egg production, pullets are the money makers in a poultry plant; hence, they should receive every attention from the poultry raiser.

Fewer mistakes in culling hens will be made when the flock has been properly fed and the hens given a chance to lay as many eggs as they are capable of producing.

Tipping the beaks of pullets is often the only remedy for bad outbreaks of cannibalism in confined flocks of pullets.

Crooked breast bones in chicks are likely to be caused by a ration deficient in minerals, or a lack of direct sunlight or its substitute, cod liver oil.

Be sure the old hens and young stock have plenty of ventilation during the summer months. Open the rear ventilator in the house and take out the windows.

Wire netting made of 16-guage wire and 1½-inch mesh has been found satisfactory for use between the chicken roosts and the dropping boards. It keeps the chickens off the boards and catches any eggs laid by the birds on the perches.

The continuous feeding of a laying mash during the summer not only maintains the egg production during a period when the prices start upward but makes possible a higher yearly record of production for the hens which finish the year.

FUNDS FOR HOMES SUPPLIED BY BANKS

By ROME C. STEPHENSON

President American Bankers Association

A LARGE portion of the funds required in home building always has been furnished by banks. They have shown constantly a deep interest in the performance of this feature of national development. Upon it rests much of our country's future stability, and any contribution to its advancement redounds to the advantage of all. So banking has never permitted its co-operative attitude toward home building to lessen.

R. C. STEPHENSON

Practically all banks now accept savings deposits which can well be turned to the advantage of the home builders. The construction of individual dwellings requires a large amount of financing and is a thoroughly commendable enterprise. Necessarily, the aid given to home builders is governed by the sound banking rules which have grown out of the years of experience and the constant studies of bank practices.

All of the efforts made to secure broader real estate loan privileges, to adjust resources to make it possible to lend larger sums for long terms, the standardization of mortgage loan formulas, and the actual lending of vast sums on mortgage notes evidence the desire of banks to contribute a full measure of support to the home-building movement. This is true of all classes of banks, but even in a more marked degree of those whose deposits are largely in the form of savings and whose loans are primarily for building or home purchasing purposes.

Both Sides Protected

The process through which bank loans are made on real estate is as simple as the nature of such an important transaction will permit. When money is advanced the lender must know that repayment will be made the specified time. Likewise the borrower wants to be assured that, after he has figured the loan on the basis of his conservatively anticipated ability to pay, he will not be required to do more, that he will not be disturbed in his efforts to work out of his obligations under those terms. Whether his agreement is to repay the entire loan in three or five years, or on a monthly or yearly basis, he wants the assurance that no additional burdens will be imposed upon him. All of this is settled definitely in advance.

There is no mystery about any of the details, and when the negotiations are complete the borrower knows just what he may expect and what he will be required to do to meet his obligations.

Loans made to persons who wish to acquire homes are not necessarily building loans. One may wish to purchase a home already constructed. In this form of transaction bank loans are used very freely because it is the only kind of a real estate loan some classes of banks may make. Others of course, may lend upon real estate with improvements uncompleted and advance funds as the construction progresses. Different styles in home financing have developed in the various states, and banks have tried to adapt their facilities to the needs. Whatever character of assistance is required in any particular instance usually can be found in some bank in the local community.

Among banks and borrowers for home acquisition purposes a long established and thoroughly tested relationship exists. Banks are not the only agencies through which such funds are available; they do not embody all the spirit of helpfulness which abounds. However, through the years of their co-operation their aid has been of unquestioned value to the home builders whose efforts to establish a permanence for themselves have received constant encouragement. Bankers everywhere are ready to counsel with their customers about their home-building plans and to assist to the extent of their ability. This is being done constantly and the many advantages of it are not without recognition.

Farm Service by a Bank

A farm service department was inaugurated a year ago by a bank in Olympia, Washington, and a farm advisor appointed. Close co-operation has been maintained with the state college extension service. Work in dairying is carried on in conjunction with the Dairy Herd Improvement Association. Also a pasture contest was held in cooperation with the four banks in the county which offered prizes amounting to $100. Work in poultry was carried on in cooperation with the Co-operative Poultry Association and assistance was given in organizing an economic conference for the benefit of berry growers. The farm advisor of the bank is active in the Agricultural Council of the county composed of farm and other organizations interested in agricultural development, and also in the Farmers' Market. Six hundred farm business analysis blanks were distributed while farm account books and poultry record books were also provided to farmers and have been helpful in starting many farmers in keeping business records.

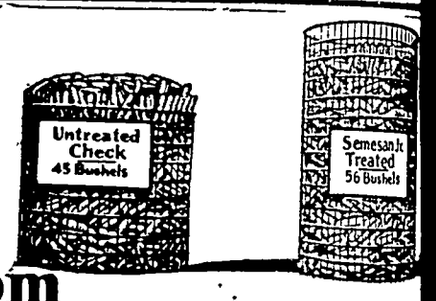
11 Bushels Increase from Semesan Jr., Seed Treatme



As a result of treating seed corn with Semesan Jr., George Delheimer of Illinois increased his yield eleven bushels per acre, according to the April 1, 1929, issue of Livingston County (Ill.) Farm Bureau News. In addition, Mr. Delheimer noticed that the treated seed was farther advanced when coming up than the untreated seed.

Semesan Jr. protects seed corn against rotting, makes early planting safer, increases germination, controls seedling blight and seed-borne infections of Diplodia, Gibberella and Basisporium.

Dust your seed corn now with Semesan Jr. or right before planting. One two ounces per bushel needed for field or sweet corn. The cost is less than an acre. Don't take a chance when protection costs so little. Four ounces 50c; one pound, $1.75; five pounds $

Use Ceresan for seed grains and cotton; Semesan Bel for seed potatoes; Semesan for vegetable and flower seeds and bulbs.

FARM BUREAU WILL TEST FERTILIZERS FOR FARMERS

Would Make Potato Growers More More Money Per Acre

"Messrs. W. G. McFarland, J. B. Haan, and Marion Trass , all of Crystal Lake, and Brozik Brothers of Garner are working with the Hancock County Farm Bureau to reduce costs of production of potatoes and to increase returns from high priced seed, from spraying and from fertilizers" writes Walter Weiss County Agent to the editor

"The above gentlemen are among our largest peat land growers This year they have 450 acres of potatoes The best certified seed is costing $30.00 to $40.00 per acre, spraying costs about $10.00. and fertilizers from $15.00 to $30.00 per acre. It goes without saying that such expenditures must be made so as to bring the finest crops and largest yields. Our growers must make good money. Hancock County wants to realize the full value of our peat lands.

"Peat lands are rich in nitrogen. but poor in potash and phosphate We want to know. but do not yet know, just how much to use of each If. we spend $20 00 an acre for fertilizer, we must have enough seed and good enough seed to get back those $20.00 and a lot more dollars and if we have spent $55.00 for fertilizers and seed for an acre, we must spray to keep these plants alive and healthy long enough to get the most dollars we can. However, although we know spraying is a good thing, we don't know how many times pay best.

"Under these circumstances we have put in whole acre test plots on these farms. Cooperating in this work with the Hancock County Farm Bureau is the extension service at Ames and a leading Iowa fertilizer company. Professor C. L. Fitch, his assistant, and Mr. Harry Gardner who represents the potash interests spent three days in Hancock County. Different parts of the plots are to be sprayed from one to eight times, starting about June 1st and in the fall, potato growers will be invited to see the weighing up of the crop from the various rows and treatments.

"Similar work is being done by the Farm Bureau of Wright county with Lawrence Gealow of Belmond and Moellering Brothers of Galt; by the farm bureau of Cerro Gordo County with Sam Kennedy of Clear Lake; by the farm bureau of Winnebago County with H O. Cleophas and Henry Kroeze of Forest City; and by the Worth county bureau with Leo Elthon of Fertile and T. C. Rye of Hanlontown.

"By next fall we shall have quite a line on these matters of seed fertilizers. and sprays and after about three seasons we ought to know exactly how to get back the most potato dollars for our seed, fertilizer and spray dollars. The peat lands of northern Iowa are going to turn off a thousand carloads of potatoes and onions this year and we must know exactly what we are doing."

TALES ... of the TRIBES

By EDITHA L. WATSON

The Kutenai

They smoked willow bark for tobacco, they worshiped the sun, and they called their friends "bad people." These were a few of the peculiarities of the Kutenai.

They lived in northern Montana and Idaho, and north in Canada. Their tradition states that formerly they were located east of the Rockies, but the Blackfeet pushed them westward, with considerable loss of life as the unwilling Kutenai slowly and resistingly gave way. The Blackfeet having accomplished this drive, the two tribes became friends, and it was not a matter for war if a Blackfoot married a Kutenai, or vice versa. But one reminder of the old days of enmity remained—their name for the Blackfeet—"bad people."

The tribes joined in buffalo hunts, part of the meat thus obtained going to each. This matter of the division of meat has caused the dissolution of many another tribal alliance, but for some reason the Kutenai and the Blackfeet never found it a cause for quarreling, and continued to carry on a custom which had proved dangerous to other nations without harm to themselves.

The costume and the customs of the Plains Indians were too firmly emplanted in the Kutenai to be entirely displaced, when they moved across the mountains to the lake country. Buffalo meat was still a staple of their diet, but to it they now added fish, cleverly trapped or adroitly speared. Horses and firearms which replaced the bows and arrows of other days became necessities; and yet stone hammers, relics of a former age, might be found in use in the late years of the last century.

Enthologists who claim an Asiatic origin for the red race find the Kutenai bark canoe of interest. It was monitor-shaped, pointed at both ends under the water, and resembled those used in certain parts of Asia. The Kutenai also had dugouts, the common "hollow log" boat which was used by so many Indian tribes.

The greatest amusement of these people was gambling, and they might often be found noisely engaged in their favorite form of this pastime. This was a guessing game in which a bundle of sticks was divided, and an odd one or a marked one was concealed among them. The object was to guess in which bundle of sticks the odd one was hidden. Possessions changed hands with considerable frequency in the excitement of this game, as the inveterate gamblers wagered their valuables amid the loud cries of the players. The Kutenai liked to dance, also, although they were not especially rich in noise making or musical instruments.

There was a great deal to be admired in the Kutenai character. They were a hospitable and moral people, with good mental ability. The vices of the whites which have caused some tribes to dwindle and finally vanish, gained little hold on these energetic and industrious folk. Some of them could draw with considerable ability and even understand the principles of map making.

The primitive Kutenai religion was a form of sun worship. The land of departed souls was located in that glowing orb, and some day it was thought the travelers would return from the sun and meet their living friends once more. Everything was credited with a soul and reincarnation was one of their strong beliefs. The "medicine man" was a great influence in those early days, his words being heeded with solemn reverence, and it took many years to change their beliefs to those more nearly approaching Christianity.

With such ideas it is not surprising to find that these people enjoyed and appreciated the beauties of nature and delighted in the scent and color of flowers. The many practical uses of plants, also as food, medicine, and in other ways, had been discovered and utilized by the Kutenai.

Their folklore included many animal stores in which beasts, birds, fish, insects, and such cold-blooded creatures as frogs and turtles played interesting parts. The coyote was the "hero" of many of these lively stories. His adventures were full of amusement and suspense—he played the most hilariously funny tricks on innocent folk, and was far away on his travels before they realized who their deceiver was.

As shown by their cultivation of the arts of peace, the Kutenai were never famous as a fighting tribe. It was no doubt due to their knowledge of this that a band of Shuswap, called the Kinbaskets, came into the Kutenai territory in British Columbia and settled down to stay. Efforts to dislodge them were frustrated by an alliance between the interlopers and the Assiniboin, who helped them to hold their position. This they managed so successfully that when the white men with their treaties of peace came into the country, they were still there.

There are 58 distinct linguistic divisions among the Indians. Many tribes could not understand each other's language, although they lived near each other. Sign language was in use between the Missouri river and the Rockies, and from Fraser river, British Columbia, to the Rio Grande. Few tribes outside this area used sign language.

Mother's Day
Sunday, May 10, 1931
There is in all this cold and hollow world no fount of deep, strong, deathless love, save that within a mother's heart.
—Mrs. Hemans

All Nations Pay Tribute to "Mother"

Mother's day is the one day in the year when every real man or woman, boy or girl, should pay tribute to the "best mother in the whole world."

It is the day when every living mother with a son or daughter worthy of the name will receive a personal message from her child, and every mother who has passed beyond will be honored by the wearing of a flower or a Mother's day button by the child left behind.

Millions of people in America, Europe, Asia and Africa observe the day set apart by a Pennsylvania woman, Miss Anna Jarvis, of Philadelphia, whose idea has grown into an international demonstration for "Mother."

Following the Civil war, every day was "Mother's day" for Mrs. Anna Jarvis, the founder of the day of observance. Mrs. Jarvis was the daughter of a minister and in her efforts to alleviate the suffering caused by the war, she toiled almost day and night in the interest of widows and orphans, left bereaved by the holocaust of strife which had swept over the land, and dependent upon the bounty of more fortunate neighbors for sustenance.

In later years, Miss Anna Jarvis, following the work of her mother, conceived the idea that the heart of every mother would be gladdened if, on some particular day, she could be assured of receiving a personal message, or flower, or some other little token of love from her loved children.

Date Fixed by Miss Jarvis.

The result was the founding of "Mother's day" and as the late spring is one of the most beautiful seasons of the year, Miss Jarvis arbitrarily fixed the second Sunday in May as the official date for this observance.

Tentatively launched as a purely local event, the idea spread to other sections of Miss Jarvis' home state, Pennsylvania, and from there became an interstate affair, eventually becoming a nationally observed date. From America it spread to South America, across the borders into Canada and Mexico and thence across the seas to Europe, Asia and Africa. And today the teachings for the observance of this day dedicated to "the best mother in the world—your mother," are being disseminated in every continent on the globe.

Miss Anna Jarvis, the founder, while in Washington on business connected with the celebration, was asked for an interview on the founding of this day. She submitted the following, taken from the Congressional Record, in which it was printed by unanimous consent:

"It is doubtful if any movement of the times, in the way of a celebration, has such a strong and lasting appeal to persons of all races, creeds and classes as has the Mother's day celebration.

"It is the most universal of all of our celebrations, for all of our religious and patriotic observances are not without prejudice of some class, race or creed.

"The word 'mother' is the most potent of all words, wherever the foot of civilization has left its imprint.

"This Mother's day is not an idle sentiment. It is a great constructive movement of international interest. It is now celebrated annually around the globe.

"The people on the boardwalks of Honolulu and Atlantic City, and Australia on the other side of the globe, are just as enthusiastic for Mother's day as any places one might mention."

Honored in Army and Navy.

In the American army and navy Mother's day is celebrated with tender enthusiasm by officers and men alike. Indeed, this celebration is thought to be of great benefit to the morale of the enlisted men. Certainly it is a cherished occasion. Nothing but good can come from the observance of any special occasion that gets a man closer to the heart of a good mother through his letter, or visit, or other remembrance of home.

Nothing but good can come from setting apart one day of the year in the army and navy, in our homes, in our official and business life, and in the life of the whole nation to pay tribute to the memory of the beloved mothers and fathers who have gone before or to show grateful affection to the living.

Worthy of Remembrance.

Our American homes are the glory of our nation. Our mothers who gave to the nation lives they loved more than their own—the lives of their beloved sons, husbands, brothers, or other dear ones—are our inspiration.

One day of the year for remembrance of their sacrifices, their fidelity, their deeds, is not indeed a day lost.

Any movement that deepens home ties, that inspires better national life, that makes better sons and daughters is indeed constructive. Far be it from any thought of maudlin sentiment. And yet "sentiment" is part of the best and most gracious and ennobling things of life, especially that sentiment which clings to the words "mother" and "home."

One of the Mother's day celebration features is "home going" and "writing home." Not any person is too poor or busy at least to write a message home.

Legislative Approval.

It will ever be to the glory of America that the first legislation for the general display of the American flag as a custom was a resolution that Miss Jarvis succeeded some years ago in getting congress to pass.

Through this resolution it is now the custom for Old Glory to be displayed annually on Mother's day (Sunday) from all public buildings, schools, and other suitable places.

Is it not an inspiring thought that the mothers of the founders of our country, the mothers of our patriots, are thus honored by sons and daughters?

It hardly seems possible that Miss Jarvis would undertake more work, but she is planning the erection of a tribute to the mothers and homes of America in Washington. This monument will be one that will remind you and me of the "mothers of our hearts," and it should be a tribute that will make the stranger of foreign lands who may visit the Capital city think that American homes and mothers are the nation's idol.

This monument will not be for what some persons may call "great mothers," nor for women seeking greatness through some ancestral line, but for your mother and mine.—Washington Star.

Mother's Only Wages the Love of Her Children

This is the age of medals. A man without a medal of some sort is a misnomer. If a boy fly across the ocean, we give him a medal. If a sprinter run faster than any other human, we strike off a medal. If a patriot bare his breast to the bullets of the enemy, we cover his coat with medals. Pay is too paltry for heroes.

But what pay does mother get? She toils day and night without reward. Her work is never done. And at that it is the only work in the world that does not have the wages.

Down in the mountains of Georgia lived a poor widow. She had a few dull acres—and a bright boy. He surpassed anything in the district. So she stinted herself and sent him to Emory college. On commencement day under pressure she went to see him receive his diploma after he had delivered his oration. However, he was also given the gold medal for scholarship. He unceremoniously strode off the platform, down the aisle, back under the gallery and pinned the honor on an old faded shawl, saying as he did it, "This belongs to you; you earned it."

Mother never raised Themistocles; she just raised us. She never ruled Russia with a rod of iron, like Catherine; she just ruled father and us—and never let us know it. She was never the queen of any country, like Elizabeth, not even the queen of the May; but she was queen in the heart of her home. And we really cared more for the queen mother than for all the queens of earth. Scotland may well say, "An ounce of mother is worth a pound of clergy."—Los Angeles Times.

Began Before Christian Era

Schauffler in his book on Mother's day states that the idea originated in the ceremonies incident to the worship of Rhea, the mother of gods, in Asia Minor, prior to the Christian era. The Greeks and Romans continued it as the festival of Hilaria, which was held on the ides of March. This festival was carried by the Romans into the Christian church, where the fourth Sunday in Lent was set aside as a time for the faithful to visit the church in which they were baptized—their mother church. It came to be known in the Angelican church as Mothering Sunday, and was a time when young persons bound out to service were allowed to visit their parents.

POULTRY

CULLING POULTRY IS QUITE SIMPLE

Consider Four Points When Picking Out Loafers.

There is no mystery about culling poultry. It is quite simple when done in the summer, since the changes in the body of the laying hen are more pronounced then than at other times.

"First," says W. F. Armstrong, poultryman at the North Carolina state college, "consider the condition of the feathers. If they are worn, ragged and dirty, it is because the hen is a worker, not a drone, and the working hen is the heavy layer. The feathers of the poor layer will be in good condition in late summer. They will be clean and well-kept because she is a society chicken and spends lots of time on her appearance. The poor layers usually get a new coat early in the summer while the heavy layers may not moult until August, September, October, November or even later."

Next, points out Mr. Armstrong, the heavy layer does not usually get enough yellow corn or green feed to keep the yellow color stored up in her body while laying; so, her skin and shanks bleach out and become white. This yellow pigment is taken from the body and put into the yolk of the egg to color it. The poor layer does not call so heavily on this reserve supply and therefore maintains her natural yellow skin and shanks.

The poor layer is fat and the good layer is usually rather thin. The latter does not have time to store up a supply of surplus fat.

The fourth point is the body measurements. When laying, the hen's body expands because more room is needed to consume more feed and manufacture eggs. The poor layer will most likely be out of lay in late summer and will have smaller measurements than the one which is producing. Measure by the width of the hand and the fingers from the rear end of the breast bone to the pubic bones and then between the arch of the pubic bones, says Mr. Armstrong. The best layers have the greater distance between these bones.

To Increase Egg Output Eliminate Broody Fowls

Not enough attention to the broody hen problem is given by the average poultryman.

This neglect is one of the reasons for low production of eggs by some flocks during the spring, points out J. C. Taylor, associate extension specialist in poultry husbandry at the New Jersey agricultural experiment station.

The practice generally followed by successful poultrymen is to confine all broody hens to crates or pens. Each bird is banded with a celluloid leg band, a different color being used for each month. By leg-banding the broody hens it is possible to identify them later in the year, and eliminate them from the breeding pen. After a bird has two or three bands she is sent to market.

The broody hens are collected about twice a week to be confined to the pens. While thus confined they are given water, mash, and green feed. This feeding plan puts them in condition so they will resume production as soon as they are over their desire to set.

Baby Chicks Double in Size in First Few Days

Baby chicks do a lot of growing in the first four weeks of their lives. H. L. Shrader, extension poultryman in the United States Department of Agriculture, says they double in size in the first two weeks. Not satisfied with such a record, they double in size again in the next two weeks, if they get the right kind of attention.

Two essentials for success in rearing baby chicks, Mr. Shrader explains, are plenty of heat and feed. A good rule to follow in feeding chicks, he says, is to provide a hopper 4 feet long for each 100 chicks. At the end of three weeks another hopper should be added.

Start for Hens

Be careful about starting hens through the summer in an over-fat condition. A great deal of the summer loss from heat is due to over-fat hens. The hens should be getting equal parts of grain and mash at this time of the year. If you do not have natural shade for the young stock and old hens, build some cheap sheds for them. Keep water troughs handy. Remember that chickens like fresh water during the hot summer months as well as plenty of shade.

Separate Cockerels

It will pay to separate young cockerels from the pullets when eight to ten weeks of age. This will give the pullets a chance for better development, and enable the poultryman to force the cockerels for market. Time and labor will be be saved by hopper-feeding the grain to the growing chicks after five weeks of age. Put the grain and mash hoppers out on the range and induce a maximum of exercise. This keeps the chicks out in the sunshine for vigor and vitality.

WHEN YOU FEEL LOW

Bayer-Tablets of Aspirin

A headache is often the sign of fatigue. When temples throb it's time to rest. If you can't stop you can stop the pain. Bayer Aspirin will do it, every time. Take two or three tablets, a swallow of water, carry-on—in comfort.

Don't work with nerves on edge, try all day to forget a nagging pain that aspirin could end in a jiffy. Genuine aspirin can't harm you, just be sure it's Bayer.

In every package of Bayer Aspirin are proven directions for headaches, colds, sore throat, neuralgia, neuritis, etc. Carry these tablets with you and be prepared.

And no modern girl needs to suffer "out" for the time of month! Bayer Aspirin is an absolute antidote for periodic pain.

Take Bayer Aspirin for any headache or pain, and take enough to relieve it. It can't depress the heart. That is medical opinion. That is why it is only sensible to insist on the genuine tablets that bear the Bayer cross.

Fellow Artists

Fritz Kreisler tells an amusing story of a visit he paid while in London the other day. His hostess, after telling him that her little girl loved music and was learning the violin, sent for the child in order to introduce her to the great violinist. Kreisler, who adores children, was charming, and said: "I hear you are having violin lessons?" "Yes," was the answer, "and mother with me you, too, play!"—London Evening Show.

years ago Calvin Coolidge, then ent, affirmed in an address in ork what he called the "distinct ding obligation on the part of pecting governments to afford tion to the persons and property of their citizens, wherever they may be."

This American doctrine Stimson now amends. American protection, by the new policy, follows American citizens ashore, but not to the interior of rebel-infested Nicaragua.

HIGHLY interesting at this time is the announcement that the Soviet government has decided to adopt a new wage system, known as the "Khozraschiot," which apparently changes the government's policy and amplifies the inauguration of piece work.

It is to go into effect at once. The wages of workers, according to Soviet authorities, will not be based on the communistic theory of equal division, but on the capitalistic idea of rewarding individual efforts in skill and ability.

The word Khozraschiot literally means "economic accounting." It is interpreted in the decree to mean that each factory, plant, collective farm, mine, railroad and such henceforth must take the responsibility of fulfilling contracts and adjudging wages without interference from trade unions.

Although certain elements among the disciples of Lenin view the innovation regretfully as a compromise with capitalism, the government hopes the system will speed up production. Leaders affect to see the Khozraschiot as tending to eliminate waste and fix responsibility for managers and workers.

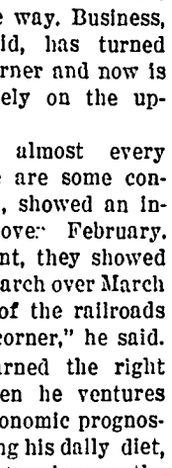
Roger W. Babson

HIGH place in the list of encouraging comments on the business situation is accorded that of Roger W. Babson, the trade prophet, who told President Hoover that better times are on the way. Business, he said, has turned the corner and now is definitely on the upgrade.

"In almost every line of industry there are some concerns which, in March, showed an increase in earnings over February. What is more important, they showed an increase for this March over March of last year. Certain of the railroads also have turned the corner," he said.

Mr. Babson has earned the right to be listened to when he ventures upon the thin ice of economic prognostication. Statistics being his daily diet, he asks the country to observe the statistics of car-loadings. These are steadily increasing. They have always been of barometrical significance. When freight is moving factories are working and shipping, merchants are buying and customers are consuming. In every key industry statistics show that one or two big firms have turned the corner, promising that smaller fry, too, are headed out of the red.

If the American people turn their gaze from the "big board" in Wall Street to the bigger opportunities which await them in constructive directions of every sort, the upturn foreseen by Mr. Babson will come all the sooner and all the surer.



Secretary Doak

RECOGNITION of the imperative necessity of solving the problem of unemployment is seen in the complete reorganization of the United States employment service, with 48 state employment bureaus and one in the District of Columbia and seven special central divisions established to deal with the problems of various trades, announced by William N. Doak, secretary of labor.

John R. Alpine of New York will head the new set-up, which has $800,000 of appropriations available for its work. Francis L Jones is to continue as director general, with supervision also over the special mining and quarrying trades division. The Veterans' placement service will be maintained, nation-wide in its scope, and the farm employment service will be expanded.

"The United States employment service has decided," Secretary Doak's announcement said, "to open up at least one employment bureau in each of the states and the District of Columbia to co-operate with state and local authorities.

A co-ordinated service throughout the entire country will undertake in the broadest sense to take care of interstate labor placements in co-operation with employers and employees, giving employers a ready field from which to draw all needed labor necessary to carry forward any kind of work."

MUCH to the surprise of financial circles, stockholders of the United States Steel corporation adopted a proposed pension plan under which James A. Farrell, president, and for several years a leading figure in the steel industry, would automatically retire on reaching the age of seventy, or in 1933.

Mr. Farrell was a leader of those in favor of the new plan, pointing out that the old one had been unsatisfactory.

There are others in the great United States Steel corporation who will retire if the plan is adopted. It provides 65 for voluntary retirement, and 70 for compulsory.

In this class soon would fall E. J. Buffington, president of Illinois Steel; Joshua A. Hatfield, president of American Bridge; Ward B. Perley, president of Canadian Steel; J. S. Keefe, president of American Steel & Wire, and E. W. Pargny, president of American Sheet & Tin Plate. All these are subsidiaries. The retirements would fall between 1933 and 1935.

It was pointed out that Mr. Gary as chairman of the board of directors worked at his steel until he died—ten years later than the proposed retirement plan would require.

It may be that some other plan will affect Mr. Farrell—that he, too, may carry on—but the pension plan says 70.

Ramsay MacDonald

WITH more ease than he himself expected Ramsay MacDonald comes safely through the tempest of a serious parliamentary setback. Stanley Baldwin's motion of censure, an open and heralded effort to drive the MacDonald government out of office, was defeated by a majority of 54 votes. Lloyd George, whose Liberal following holds the balance of power in the house of commons, turned the tide to MacDonald when he denounced the Conservative motion as unfair. Of 58 Liberal votes, MacDonald received 35, the Conservatives only 10, the remainder not voting or absent.

Quite evidently, Great Britain is in no mood to fall victim to political spellbinding. It knows that none of the political leaders possesses a magic wand that can charm away the disastrous consequences of the war. The nation must climb a long and weary trail, and it is prepared to do so.

Doubtless the Indian situation, which has been one of the chief causes for the depression in the British textile industry because of the Indian boycott on British goods, was an important consideration with the Liberals in supporting MacDonald.

Fausto Davila

BELIEF that the revolution in Honduras is related with operations of the insurgents under Augustino Sandino in Nicaragua has gained ground among observers of Central American politics.

It is pointed out that Gen. Gregorio Ferrera, head of the revolutionary movement in Honduras, is openly opposed to United States intervention activities, sharing Sandino's views in this regard.

Ferrera was in Mexico a year ago. He is of Indian blood and has a large following among the laborers on the large United States banana plantations of the north coast of Honduras.

Dr. Jesus Castro, Honduran charge d'affaires at Mexico City, who recently returned from a visit to Tegucigalpa, said President Mejia Colindres' refusal to admit Ferrera into his cabinet was the probable cause of the revolution. He is confident it will fail, as the President has an influential backing and a well-trained army.

Julius G. Lay, United States minister in Honduras, reported to the State department that, in his opinion, the revolt would soon "fizzle out." He said no military or political figures of consequence appear to be connected with it.

Fausto Davila is the premier and foreign minister of Honduras, and is considered by South American diplomats at Washington as well able to deal with the situation.

A STATEMENT setting out the attitude of Newton D. Baker of Cleveland, former secretary of war, toward talk of his candidacy for the Democratic nomination for the Presidency is accepted by politicians as clearing the atmosphere.

Issued by W. B. Congwer, an Ohio Democratic leader, after a conference with Mr. Baker, the statement indicated that the ex-secretary will not do anything to obtain the nomination, but he will not refuse it should it come to him if the Democratic national convention is unable to agree on any of the active candidates.

During the scramble for delegates to the convention Mr. Baker will not use his influence in behalf of any particular candidate.

The statement also said: "The many kind things said about Newton D. Baker as a possible Democratic candidate for the Presidency are certainly gratifying to Mr. Baker's friends and naturally to him. In my conversations with Mr. Baker he has shown very great interest in the party's platform, but no interest in possible candidates, and I do not believe he has changed his former judgment on the subject. This has always been that he had no desire for further political preferment of any kind."

THE PARABLE OF THE POUNDS

LESSON TEXT—Luke 19:11-26.

GOLDEN TEXT—Moreover it is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Teaches Us to Do Our Best.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Teaches Us to Do Our Best.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Partners With Jesus.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Stewardship of Money.

The purpose of this parable was to correct the misapprehension of the disciples as to the immediate establishment of the kingdom. They were on the way to Jerusalem, and the disciples thought that immediately upon their arrival there Jesus would begin the exercise of his kingdom rule. Christ taught the disciples the reality of his coming and the setting up of a real kingdom, but indicated that there would be a long delay after his ascension before he would return.

I. The Absent Nobleman (v. 12).

Going away to receive a kingdom was a common occurrence among the Jews. Members of the Herodian family had gone to Rome and secured their appointment to rule over Palestine. This pictures Jesus going back to God to receive his kingdom. Jesus ascended on high to receive from God the Father a kingdom. He will return when the fullness of the Gentiles be come in. Though the time of his return be unknown, and even delayed, let no one mistake the certainty of his coming.

II. The Distribution of the Pounds (v. 13).

These pounds represent Christ's gifts to his servants. When Christ ascended he gave gifts to men (Ephesians 4:7-12). To each servant was given the same amount, showing that to all a certain gift had been given and therefore all will be held responsible for its use. The distribution was made by the sovereign. The servants did not choose as to whether they would have a gift at all, or even its amount. It was also a purposeful distribution. They were to put their gifts to use during his absence. What the nobleman demanded was faithfulness.

III. The Rebellious Citizens (v. 14).

They hated him and sent messengers after him, notifying him of their refusal to be subject to him. This pictures the unbelief of the Jews after Christ's ascension, and their repudiation of his rule. It also pictures the unbelieving world in its hatred and rejection of Christ.

IV. The Accounting (vv. 15-27).

1. Its certainty (v. 15).

Christ will surely bring every one to account for the use made of his gifts. Men may go on in proud unbelief and rebellion, but God never forgets. He has appointed a day in which he will judge the world (Acts 17:31).

2. The time (v. 15).

It will take place when Jesus comes back to the earth. His return will take place when he has received his kingdom. He will receive his kingdom when he asks the Father (Ps. 2:8). His delay in asking the Father for his kingdom is because of his long suffering mercy, extending grace to as many as will receive him as Savior.

3. Rewards given for faithfulness (vv. 16-19).

(1) The first report (vv. 16, 17).

He did not say, "I have made ten pounds," but "Thy pound hath gained ten pounds." He recognized the Lord's ownership. To this the Lord replied by commendation. He praised him and promoted him, making him ruler over ten cities.

(2) The second report (vv. 18, 19).

In this case the pound had gained five pounds. He did not get the Lord's commendation for he had not done so well, but was appointed to a place of rulership over five cities. The reward in each case was proportioned to faithfulness during the Lord's absence.

4. Judgment upon the unfaithful (vv. 20-27).

(1) His report (vv. 20, 21).

This report was entirely bad. He had not put the pound to use but laid it away, throwing the blame upon the Lord. He asserted that the character of the Lord was such as to produce fear.

(2) Condemnation (vv. 22, 23).

The wicked servant is judged out of his own mouth. His excuse increased his guilt. He is called wicked. To fail to use our opportunities to serve Christ is the basest wickedness.

(3) Stripped of the pound (vv. 24-26).

To fail to use one's gifts means to lose them. One of the losses of the next world will be the deprivation of what we now have.

Must Battle With Evil

Evil never surrenders its hold without a sore fight. We never pass into any spiritual inheritance through the delightful exercises of a picnic, but always through the grim contentions of the battlefield. Every faculty which wins its spiritual freedom does so at the price of blood.—J. H. Jowett.

Names of Great Lakes

Gannett's "Origin of Place Names in the United States" says that opinions differ as to the origin of the name Huron. According to some it is a corruption of "Hure" given a tribe of Indians by the French. It means "the head of a wild boar." It is believed by some that it is from the Indian words "onkwe honwe," meaning "true man." Still others believe it is a corruption by French from the Indian "irri ronon," meaning "cat tribe." Erie is from "Erige," or "Erike," the name of a now extinct Indian tribe. The word signifies "cat" or "wildcat." Some authorities believe the word means "mad." Ontario in the Indian word meaning beautiful lake or "beautiful prospect of rocks, hills and water." Michigan is an Indian word said by some to mean "big lake" and by others "place for catching fish." Superior is a translation of the original French name, "Lac Superieur aux Ontaouacs," meaning "the upper lake of the Ottawas."

Holland's Changed Conditions

In the past 50 years a great change has taken place in Holland with respect to its agricultural status. Formerly it was an importer of dairy products, but a little more than a generation ago the farmers of that country became interested in modern machinery, the use of which became popular at once and the entire situation was changed so that at the present time the country takes care of its own consumption and in addition a great deal of this material is shipped abroad.

Ghosts Scare Tenants Away

In Yorkshire, England, the land of desolate moors and old manor houses, there are several big important mansions that no one will live in. They are simply falling to rack and ruin because no one can be persuaded to rent or purchase them. The reason? Ghosts!

WEED SEEDS OFTEN LIVE FOR 40 YEARS OR MORE

Farmers May Encourage Weed Germination—Then Kill Them

Because nature provided that weed seeds can live for many years in the ground before they germinate, Hancock county farmers who wish to rid their farms of noxious weeds should never allow them to produce seed if it can possibly be prevented, according to word received by county agent Walt Weiss from R H Porter, extension plant pathologist at Iowa State College who is assisting Iowa counties in their campaign to eradicate weeds .

Seed production may be prevented by the use of crop rotation, clean cultivation mowing of roadsides and pastures Germination of weed seeds in cultivated land should be encouraged This can be done by disc ing and harrowing the plowed ground early in the spring or by plowing cornstalk ground late in the spring just before time to plant corn

If the disking and harrowing method is followed a good seedbed should be prepared and then the land can be worked with a harrow or weeder at intervals of from five to seven days to drag the germinating seeds out on top of the soil where they will be killed. This practice can be used with the production of a soybean crop because beans can be planted as late as June 1st, thus allowing time for germination of weed seed In addition the crops can be cultivated until late in the season

Many weeds such as pigweed, rag weed, black mustard, pepper grass, evening primrose, common plantain and others live for 40 years or more in the soil before germinating. The weeds which live from 10 to 20 years before germinating, are very common For this reason weeds should be prevented from producing seed, seeds already in the soil should be encouraged to germinate and should be killed in the seedling stage

Life Story of Kiss

The kiss developed out of the primitive habit of rubbing noses with a man who was your equal in the social scale. If you met a superior, then you rubbed his face with your nose.

In time, it became the custom for two persons who were greeting each other to touch lips instead of noses. And years later the kiss lost its ceremonial importance and became an affectionate gesture between two friends or lovers.

But many races still retain nose-rubbing as a salutation. The Maoris of New Zealand press their noses together when they meet, and in Melanesia it is the custom to put your nose close to the other person's and to sniff.

Boxing the Compass

To box the compass means, in nautical language, to recite in consecutive order the points of the mariner's compass. The points from north to east are as follows: North, north one-half east, north by east, north by east one-half east, north north east, north north one-half east, north east by north, north east one-half north, north east, north east by one-half east, north east by east, north east by east one-half east, east north east, east north east one-half east, east by north, east one-half north, east.

Phrase Long in Use

The phrase "bite the dust" appears to a casual reader to be strictly American, it being familiar to those who have read in the old dime novels of how "another redskin bit the dust." But it is in fact rooted in antiquity. Among the earliest recorded uses of the expression are in Homer's "Illiad," book two, and Ovid's "Metamorphoses," book nine. The words translated became popular the world over.—Kansas City Times.

Belief in Evil Spirits Common to All Peoples

There are many explanations as to where and when the story of the Devil or Satan originated, that is, when this personage first came upon the earth and who or what creed first brought him here?

The belief in evil spirits has been found in practically all religions and among all peoples from the earliest times, and how the idea has been modified from time to time may be gathered by reference to cyclopedia articles on the subject, to articles in Bible cyclopedias, dictionaries of religious knowledge, Catholic Cyclopedia, Jewish Cyclopedia, etc. The word "Satan" signifies "an enemy" and the word "Devil" signifies "a slanderer." The International Encyclopedia says in part: "In later Jewish and Christian belief, a mighty spirt of evil who has during unknown ages ruled over a kingdom of evil spirits and is in constant and restlessly active opposition to God" The writer of that article states that the Hebrews knew little about such evil spirits until they came in contact with the religions of Babylonia and Persia during their captivity in Babylonia. These ideas were developed by the Jews and many of them were carried over into Christian theology, where they were subject to other influences.

Fainting Spells One of Acrobats' Great Perils

It is not unknown for acrobats to faint in mid-air One famous acrobat has said that during a somersault in mid-air from a trapeze his brain is numbed, and for a second or two he is practically unconscious. This he attributes to the speed with which the evolution is performed, and the sudden shock it gives to the brain. One night a woman performer was preparing to do a sensational flying act from one trapeze to another when, suddenly, at the moment she should have jumped, she was seen to sway dizzily. The next second the horrified crowd saw her tumble head first from the trapeze. Fortunately, the rope was twined around her ankle so that she hung head downward. She was obviously in a dead faint. Quick as a flash another trapezist swung himself out, and, in a flying leap, grasped the trapeze from which the girl was dangling. He pulled her back to safety, fastened a rope round her waist, and lowered her—still in a faint—to the stage.

Origin of "Size"

"Sedere" is a Latin verb from the same root as our "to sit" and has the same meaning. With the addition of "ad," meaning "to," we have "adsidere" or "assidere," meaning literally "to sit to." From this comes the medieval law-word "assisa," which has several meanings, of which the most important is "a sitting of a judge," preserved in our "assize." The French form "l'assise," meaning, "the assize," was probably mistaken for "la size." The latter word meant, first, "legal regulation by a judge sitting in assize," then the thing regulated particularly weights and measures, next a standard of magnitude, and so at last simply "bigness."

Revolution's Beginning

The French revolution was mainly the result of the oppression of the French people, who rose in revolt against the extravagance and tyranny of the kings and nobles. In addition they had no adequate representation in the legislature. The taxes were heavy and in 1777 there were as many as 1,250,000 beggars in France. Alarmed by the increasing signs of unrest in the country, the king and some of the nobles began to gather the army near Paris. This so enraged the people of Paris that they stormed the bastille on July 14, 1789. This is regarded as the beginning of the revolution.

Buddhist Cave Temples

Though the Ceylon Buddhists did not make such fine cave temples as their fellow religionists in India, there are several which are of more than passing interest. One very curious example is to be found at Dambulla, not far from Kandy, where natural caves have been enlarged, and huge images have been carved in the interior. But modern structures have been built in front of these caves, thus spoiling the whole conception. The whitewashed brick walls seem very incongrubus in the vicinity of ancient cave temples, which are probably nearly two thousand years old.

Different Kind of Work

In a south side school the class in literature was very much interested in the poem, "The Village Blacksmith." In the midst of the discussion the teacher asked:

"Why does the blacksmith have such large muscles? My arm isn't like that."

After a pause, one of the girls replied:

"He does his work with his arm, while you do yours with your mouth."

Took His Word

Brown inserted an advertisement in a newspaper offering his car for sale. At 8 p. m. the door bell rang, and a man asked to see the car. "It's out in front," said Brown. He had no garage, so parked it there.

"There's no car there," said the man—and he was right. Brown's advertisement read: "For sale, good car. A gift. First to see it will take it." The first man to see took it all right.

As African Youngster Climaxed Bible Story

The wit and wisdom of the Ovimbundu people, one of the many tribes that make up the Bantu race, is well known in Africa

Umbundu proverbs--Umbundu being the speech of the Ovimbundus—and the replies of Ovimbundu children, especially in Bible classes taught by missionaries, says the Boston Post, show conclusively that the native African has a potential intellect not to be sneezed at, and proves also that children are children the world over.

Results of a recent Bible examination among a group of children threw astounding light upon Biblical history. One small boy finished a dramatic recital of the story of David and Goliath (the native African is a born actor) with the rather startling climax which, translated literally, was:

"And the giant said to David, 'Go away, little boy, I like the looks of your face and I don't want to spoil it.'"

Woman Patriotic Figure in History of Old City

Mainz is one of the first and oldest cities on the Rhine. It has also furnished its share of legends and played its part in making this river one of the most famous in the world. Here is one that holds a bit of charm and philosophy: When the French occupied the city the countess of Stein led the young women to take a vow not to listen to a word of love from any man until the country was rid of the invaders. The French, thinking this might stimulate their foes, tried to humble her by giving her a broom and commanding her to sweep the streets. Instead of being shamed, she swept them and prayed as she swept, "God of my Fatherland, bless my sweeping, and as I sweep the highway, grant that the enemy may be swept from the land." Instead of jeering her, as the French had anticipated, her own people gathered about her and prayed "God bless the sweeping." Fired by the courage of the countess the young men succeeded in sweeping the enemy from their land.

Frankfort Long Great City

Since the great trade routes of the Middle ages, Frankfort-on-the-Main has played one of the most important parts in the commercial activities of all Europe, and for many years was the undisputed mistress of the international money market. However, her simplicity and quiet charm have not been affected by her eminent position in international affairs. She reflects her ancient walls and towers in the clear waters of the Main with a modest dignity becoming a beloved monarch. It is no wonder she beguiled and endeared herself so keenly to the heart of Goethe, her native son, who was inspired to write his famous opera "Faust," in the first part of which old Frankfort breathes in almost every verse.

Proof of Education

William H. Danforth selected the following from "The Marks of an Educated Man": An educated man cultivates the open mind; never laughs at new ideas; knows the secret of getting along with other people; cultivates the habit of success; knows as a man thinketh, so is he; knows popular notions are always wrong; always listens to the man who knows; links himself with a great cause; builds an ambition picture to fit his abilities; keeps busy at his highest natural level; knows it is never too late to learn; never loses faith in the man he might have been; achieves the masteries that make him a world citizen, and lives a great religious life.

Good Cheer

Good cheer is almost as essential to life as sunshine, air and water—and is quite as plentiful.

Cheerfulness has a dual value in life. First it helps you—then it helps you to help others—and it keeps on spreading out into the great throng of humanity, stirring the hearts of men as the gentle breeze stirs the leaves of the forest—returning again and again to you in its endless course and all the while making the heavy load lighter and the dark road brighter for all.

Good cheer is one of the biggest little things among all the elements of success.

Buddhistic Shrine

The great Shwe Dagon pagoda is one of the best known places of worship in the East. It has a particular sanctity to Buddhists because it is credited with containing actual relics not only of Gautama but of the three Buddhas before him. The pagoda stands upon a mound partly natural and partly artificial. It is about 370 feet high and is profusely covered with gilt from base to summit. At the base of the pagoda hill are many monasteries.

Beautiful Stockholm

There are a few cities of the world whose beauty it never seems possible to eclipse, and Stockholm is one. It is a city of great and splendid buildings--the town hall and the royal palace are of the first order in Europe. The spacious streets are lined with gay and palatial hotels and quiet, lovely homes. But perhaps the waterways and the islands on which the city is built are what make Stockholm not just beautiful, but the beautiful.

CHAPTER IX—Continued.

Referring to their lack of artillery in the beginning, General Birch said there was reason to believe that they had finally attained a superiority over the Germans.

Real Teamwork Lacking.

Sir Douglas told me some of the details of Nivelle's unsuccessful attack in the spring, how it was known far and wide, beforehand and spoke particularly of the consequent serious disaffection among the French troops. Although he had placed himself under Nivelle's command for these operations, he had, he said, little confidence in the outcome from the start. He also commented on the failure of the French to co-operate fully on various occasions. His remarks entirely confirmed the belief that I had long since held that real teamwork between the two armies was almost totally absent.

Scarcely anything more strikingly impressed upon me our unpreparedness than what I saw during a few hours spent with General Trenchard at the British flying field, where we witnessed flyers doing every imaginable stunt, and saw planes of all classes, bombing, pursuit and observation, motors of different types and the thoroughly equipped repair shops.

The outstanding thing, however, which it was gratifying to note later on in our own aviation personnel, was the incomparable spirit and alertness of the young officers and the enlisted personnel. Every man seemed to be disappointed when a flight of planes departed for the front without him.

This visit to British headquarters was most instructive, as every opportunity was given us to study intimately the details of their wartime organization. After similar studies of the French system we selected from each those features best suited to perfect a well-balanced staff for our own army.

The cordial relations and good understanding established between Sir Douglas Haig and myself and between the corresponding members of our staffs and with a number of the leading British officers with whom we were later to have official dealings proved very advantageous. In London, long after the armistice, Sir Douglas, in an after-dinner speech, referred to this visit, which happened during a period of depression, and said that our timely appearance at his headquarters had aroused in them a strong feeling of hopefulness for the future.

Meets Other Leaders.

My diary at this time notes the following:

Paris, Thursday, July 26, 1917. —Had breakfast yesterday at the Crillon with Lloyd George. He is alert and energetic and has a clear conception of allied problems. Took lunch with Mr. Balfour, who thinks we have reason to feel easier regarding submarines. Representatives of the various allies met for conference on general situation. In the evening M. Ribot, the prime minister, gave a state dinner to officials attending conference.

Today attended luncheon to allied representatives given by the President and Mme. Poincare at the Elysee palace.

In conference this afternoon with Petain, Cadorna, Robertson and Foch at latter's office. Discussed military plans, talked about tonnage possibilities and shortage of personnel. All pessimistic and reserved.

James Stillman, just returned from a tour of France, confirms reports of serious depression.

Situation Not Hopeful.

The meeting of the allied military leaders July 26, which was my first, brought out little that was hopeful. The political relations of the allies were touched upon in a general way, but only so far as they might affect the military situation. The most significant recent event, of course, had been the crisis in Russia.

With reference to American assistance, I gave in detail the situation as to our man power, immediate and prospect, especially in the light of the latest plans of the department, and laid particular emphasis on the necessity of additional shipping. A cablegram had just been received in response to mine of July 6 in which I had requested that at least a million men reach France by the following spring.

This message, indicating that the War department foresaw small chance of securing the necessary tonnage, was read to the conference in part as follows:

"By using all shipping which is now in sight for the purpose and which will be available after month of November, the plan proposes to transport to France by June 15, 1918, twenty-one divisions, comprising about 420,000 men, together with auxiliary troops and replacement troops, line of communication troops, and others, amounting to 214,970 men, making a total of 634,975 men."

More Tonnage Needed.

Although short of my recommendations, even this schedule could be carried out only by a very large increase of tonnage. The other members of the conference were of the opinion that if new adjustments could be made there might be shipping for nine or ten of our divisions before spring. So for the moment there did not seem to be the slightest chance of transporting a million men to France by the following June.

After canvassing the whole situation, the conference expressed the unanimous opinion that a defensive role should be adopted on all secondary fronts. The British and French representatives hoped that the surplus troops resulting from this course might be available to strengthen their armies in France and General Cadorna, of course, thought the Italian armies should have their share.

CHAPTER X

About this time (July, 1917) disturbing reports were submitted to me confidentially by one of our naval officers sent by Admiral Sims from London. Calculations based upon tonnage losses for May, June and July seemed to confirm the conclusions of a month previous that there would soon be insufficient allied shipping left to bring over an American army of required strength, and that the allies would find it difficult to keep up their food supply from overseas.

The data presented by the naval officer proved that if this rate of destruction could not be reduced the war would be lost before we could fire a shot.

This report was certainly most pessimistic, but it did not dispel my confidence in the success of the plan that had been tested and was about to be inaugurated of sending ships over in convoys under the protection of naval vessels. Additional destroyers requested by Admiral Sims had by this time largely increased such craft in European waters, and as a result the activities of submarines had been somewhat diminished for July as compared with April.

Need of Speed Evident.

Yet for the time being ship construction in British yards continued below losses and our shipping board at home had scarcely stopped wrangling over materials and types. All these facts caused everybody to realize the extreme urgency of speed, and that in turn gave some hope that the prospects might soon become brighter.

It was my belief, even in the face of the heavy losses, that with complete co-operation under expert management and distribution, the shipping would be ample for all purposes. This would require, of course, that it be placed under some central authority, but the governments, especially the British, that controlled most of it, while apparently desirous of helping, did not seem inclined to think they could make any concessions. They had entered into arrangements to assist each other with shipping for foodstuffs, but there was no such thing as pooling of allied tonnage for general purposes.

However, the discouraging reports on the situation did make such an impression on the military leaders that they suggested the possibility of pooling all available shipping and accordingly recommended a commission to consider the question, with especial reference to the transportation of the American army.

Spies Get Sailing Dates.

The success of submarine warfare had been largely dependent upon advance knowledge concerning movements of vessels. As there was no doubt that the sailing dates of much of our shipping reached Germany through spies, one way to reduce the danger would be to close such sources of information.

In the beginning the practice by our War department of transmitting secret information was extremely loose. The data regarding sailing was, of course, sent to my headquarters, but at the same time, or often before, it was also given to both French and British military and naval attaches and missions in Washington. They immediately transmitted the information by cable to their respective governments, with the result that it usually became almost common knowledge.

But there were other sources of information possessed by the enemy. One message intercepted by the French, sent from some wireless station in Spain to the German general staff, announced the arrival of several American vessels at Nantes and of 10,000 American soldiers at St. Nazaire, and also gave the routes taken by our transports.

Another, evidently intended for submarines, reported the departure of a convoy of transports from New York. These and similar facts were cabled at once to Admiral Sims and to Washington.

Leadership Big Problem.

Probably the most important factor in building up an aggressive army is the selection of leaders. Without sufficient leadership the finest of troops may suffer defeat by inferior forces skillfully led.

The following was my recommendation to Secretary of War Baker:

"My observation of British and French armies and most exacting arduous service conditions at the front fully convince me that only officers in full mental and physical vigor should be sent here. Contrary course means certain inefficiency in our service and possible later humiliation of officers concerned. General officers must undergo extreme effort in personal supervision of operations in trenches. Very few British or French division commanders over forty-five or brigadiers over forty.

"We have too much at stake to risk inefficiency through mental or physical defects. Strongly recommend conditions be fully considered in making high appointments and suggest that no officer of whatever rank be sent here for active service who is not strong and robust in every particular. Officers selected for appointment general officer of line should be those with experience in actively commanding troops. Officers not fulfilling above conditions can be usefully employed at home training troops."

Little Effort at Selection.

These recommendations were not altogether followed at home. In fact very little effort seems to have been made at selection, so that some officers without ambition or initiative, whose inefficiency should have been well known, and others whose age and physical condition were such as to disqualify them for strenuous service, were given important assignments.

Most of them were known to me and not a few who, under the rule of seniority, were commanders of regiments and departments, had lacked the energy even to train their commands or themselves in battle exercises, where favorable opportunity had been offered.

The policy of the War department from beginning to end seemed to be to appoint officers to the higher grade, according to seniority, with the intention of weeding out the inefficient later on. This appears to have been the department's idea of selection and the result was practically no selection at all. After the appointment of such officers it was a slow process to eliminate them.

In the Training Area.

The First division was now well settled in its training area in the region of Gondrecourt, south of Bar-le-Duc. The troops of the division had already established friendly relations with the French peasantry and had quickly adapted themselves to their new mode of life.

As the natural consequence of the financial condition of the frugal French provincial, he was wont to profit by the presence of the British and ourselves, and the open-handed payday habits of the Americans served to give some encouragement to this inclination. As a result some coolness grew up later between our men and their early friends.

In all history I do not believe there has ever been an army on foreign soil so considerate and observant of the rights and interests of the people. The peasant class made a strong appeal to every man in the army. Their simplicity, their love of the soil and the long hours of work in the fields by the old men and women and young boys and girls remained the constant admiration of our soldiers.

I am inclined to think, however, that the excellent behavior of the men in the first contingent, their rather unmilitary appearance in ill-fitting uniforms and their apparent lack of formal discipline created the impression in the minds of the French officials that they were too kind-hearted to become aggressive fighting troops.

At the conclusion of my inspection of various places Chaumont was selected as the best site for our general headquarters. It was on our line of communications to the front and centrally placed as to probable sectors of our operations. The fine stone regimental barracks became our headquarters and we were able to obtain ample billeting accommodations in houses for all except the enlisted men, who were provided with temporary barracks.

CHAPTER XI

In the organization of our armies for the World war it was evident that if any considerable numbers were to be sent abroad an additional force would be needed over and above the regular army and the National Guard.

The War department therefore established what was called the national army, to be composed principally of men who were to come into service through the draft. Most of the divisions of the national army were organized in August and September, 1917.

As the time approached to begin the training of the smaller units it was found that after equipping the special troops urgently needed in France there was little equipment left even for the additional men required to fill up the National Guard.

Unfortunately, this made it necessary to delay calling out men for the units of the national army. However, considerable numbers were called into service and proceeded with preliminary instruction, but the lack of equipment seriously delayed their progress.

Visiting Billeting Areas.

My diary notes the following:

Paris, Tuesday, August 21, 1917. —Visited billeting areas of Forty-seventh French and our First division with General Petain on Sunday.

Inspected St. Dizier regulating station and witnessed attack near Verdun yesterday. Visited French hospital at Souilly.

Returned this morning with M. Painleve, minister of war, on his train.

As I had accepted General Petain's invitation to see the French offensive that was to take place August 20, I motored to French general headquarters on the 18th, accompanied by Colonel Palmer and Captain Boyd, and after dinner left with General Petain and two or three members of his staff on his train for an inspection of French and American troops the following day. We reached Gondrecourt the next morning and began the day with a review of the French Forty-seventh infantry division, which was paraded on a prominent plateau near Houdelaincourt.

This division had been in every serious engagement of the war and its losses had been very heavy, as could be easily surmised from the youthful appearance of the officers, most of whom had risen from the ranks to replace casualties among their seniors. General Petain told them that because of its fine record the division had been given the special honor of assisting in the instruction of the American First division.

Visit Our Troops in Training.

Accompaned by Brigadier General Bundy, Colonel Cruikshank and others, I took General Petain to see some of our troops being trained in throwing grenades and in the use of the French automatic rifle. An amusing story was told us in connection with grenade instruction. One of the men insisted on throwing his grenade immediately after setting the fuse instead of waiting till he slowly counted seven, which was necessary so the explosion would occur as the grenade reached its destination.

After being cautioned several times by his officer the man said: "Captain, I just can't hold these grenades any longer because I can feel them swelling in my hand."

We visited several villages occupied by French and American troops. As we passed through our billets and inspected the kitchens, Petain particularly inquired about the components of our ration and the manner of cooking and serving meals. The French soldiers were furnished wine in place of coffee provided for our men and the allowances differed in other respects, ours containing a larger meat component. But when it came to cooking the French were ahead of us, although our men preferred our own food to either the French or British ration.

Wounded Nurse Decorated.

Motoring to Souilly, the headquarters of the French Second army, we met Major General Fayolle, commanding the group of armies of the center, and Major General Guillaumat, commander of the Second army, whose chief of staff explained in detail the plan of the battle that was to take place next day. We had luncheon with General Fayolle, whom later I came to regard as one of the ablest of the French generals. In appearance he was rather frail, no longer young, but active and alert.

On our visit to the military hospital at Souilly General Petain decorated Mdlle. de Baye, a nurse, with the croix de guerre, as she lay on a cot suffering from a severe wound inflicted by a piece of shell two days before. When he told her who I was she said: "I am glad you are here, general, to see how a French woman can suffer for her country." She was so happy, however, that I am sure that for the moment she had entirely forgotten her pain.

FEEDING CORN TO HOGS PROFITABLE

Safest Investment and One Way of Making Money

"The most profitable method of marketing corn for the next two years is by feeding it to hogs and then marketing the hogs," W. W. Shay, swine extension specialist of the North Carolina State college, says, in speaking of the low price of corn and the profit to be made in hogs at the present time. "Feeding corn to hogs is the safest farm investment and the surest way to make a profit in farming this year."

If the corn is produced at a low cost per bushel, Mr. Shay says that it is always profitable to feed corn to hogs. Even if the corn is high in price per bushel or the yield per acre is low, the feeding of corn to hogs will increase its bushel value. "When the farmer has a big loss in the cost of corn, due to low production per acre, this can be cut down by feeding to hogs, but not always eliminated."

The person who cannot produce at least 30 bushels of corn or more to the acre had best stay out of the hog raising business.

Self-feeder demonstrations in the eastern part of the state this past year showed that corn will increase enormously in value if fed to hogs. One demonstration showed a profit of 485 per cent on corn by such feeding, despite the death of one hog during the demonstration. The hogs, in this case, ate 209 bushels of corn, which would have brought $188.10 if sold as corn. After paying all other charges, and deducting the value of the hog which died, $19.75, the hogs still paid a profit of $285.94 for the corn and left plant food worth $49.35 on the farm, whereas $31.35 worth of plant food would have gone out with the corn, had it been sold. The other two demonstrations proved the same thing. In the demonstrations, the hogs were put on self-feeders half the time and then turned in on standing corn, supplemented with fish meal.

The raising of plenty of corn and hogs will be a great boost for the "Live-at-Home" movement, Mr. Shay believes. He wants many hog feeding demonstrations this year, with accurate records kept.

Suggested Ration for Fattening Lamb Crop

Lambs being fattened on a suitable grain mixture and good hay will not be expected to eat as much silage as breeding ewes. As the lambs get on full feed of grain the roughage is naturally reduced. About two pounds of grain daily is a full feed for lambs being fattened. Corn is of course the universal fattener among the grains—barley is used a lot in western New York. A suggested ration to start with would be a half pound of grain, two pounds of clover hay, and one pound of silage daily. Lambs when on full feed should clean up their grain and eat the good or edible part of their hay. Some feeders feed a little wheat bran with the fattening concentrate which is a good practice as wheat bran has a beneficial effect on the system of the lamb.

Proper Attention Will Prevent Much Pig Loss

There is a considerable loss of pigs at the time of birth and within a very short time afterwards. Many pigs are born dead, and many more are so weak that they live only a short time. Much of this loss can be avoided by proper feeding of brood sows and by providing suitable quarters for farrowing. Of course, attention at farrowing time will save many pigs, but unless sows have been fed a ration that contains sufficient protein and mineral matter, it is a foregone conclusion that there will be some dead pigs at birth, and many of those that are born alive will be too weak to live long.

Supplementing Corn

For supplementing corn on alfalfa pasture one pound of tankage has proved to be as efficient for pigs as two pounds of linseed meal, soy beans, or soy bean meal. A mineral mixture composed of equal parts of ground limestone, super-phosphate, and salt did not improve a ration of corn and soy beans on alfalfa pasture. In fact the feed required per 100 pounds of grain was higher when minerals were fed than without them. These are some of the results of last year's hog feeding tests.

Oats for Pigs

In Ohio feeding tests with hogs, whole oats fed with ground corn produced more rapid and economical gains than ground oats with corn. When oats constituted the entire grain ration, the ground oats produced the greater gains but not sufficiently to pay for the cost of grinding. Oats did not prove an economical substitute for corn but a limited amount of whole oats in a ration of corn, tankage, ground alfalfa, and minerals ingains.

AROUND THE COUNTY WITH AGENT WEISS

APPLY CALYX SPRAY TO FRUIT TREES SOON

Is Important Application To Help Produce Good Fruit Crop

The calyx spray usually considered the most important of the orchard sprays, should be applied to fruit trees when at least 95 percent of the petals have fallen from the apple blossoms, according to County Agent Walt Weiss. Hancock county orchards will be ready for the calyx spray during the first five to seven days following May 12 after the petals are practically off and before the calyx cup of the apple grows shut.

Mr. Weiss suggests using in this spray 1½ lbs. of lead arenate and 5 qts of liquid lime sulphur or (3½ lbs. of the dry form) to 50 gallons. For people who live in town and have but a few trees the proportion to 5 gallons of spray mixture would be 2¼ ounces of lead arsenate and 6 ounces of dry lime sulphur. All apples, cherries. plums, pears, black raspberries, gooseberries and currants should be sprayed.

Lime sulphur will burn peach and grape foliage so these two fruit should not receive this mixture. Usually grapes do not need spraying, but if black rot (berries rot on the bunches and dry up) was noticed last year, they should be sprayed with bordeaux mixture.

Recent weather conditions have been favorable for disease development on fruit trees. This will make it very necessary to apply a spray as soon as possible after the petals are nearly off to control scab on the apple.

WOOL MARKETING PLAN

Local wool producers expect to ship approximately 30,000 pounds of wool out of Hancock. to be sold thru the pool of the Iowa Sheep and Wool Growers' Association in accord with the Federal Farm Board plan set up last year according to Walt Weiss. county agent.

Last year Iowa wool growers shipped approximately 1¼ million pounds of wool, for which over $200,000 was advanced after the wool was graded in Des Moines.

The number shipping from this county is expected to materially increase because of the success of last year's plan. According to information from the National Wool Marketing Corporation in Boston, a little more than 70 per cent of the wool for 1930 has been sold. On the basis of sales to date producers should receive 3 to 7 cents a pound in addition to the advance payment made last summer which in most cases equalled the local market price.

Thirty-five hundred wool producers who sold the 1¼ million pounds of wool are receiving approximately $61,250 more than if they had sold on the local market. This is an average of about $18 per grower

The competition furnished local buyers by the cooperative shippers resulted in higher wool prices for everyone regardless of whether they joined the pool or not wool growers state. The grower wh marketed his wool thru the state pool received a still higher price.

ROBERT MONTGOMERY IN "SHIPMATES"

Will Be Shown In Mason City, Iowa For Four Days Starting Saturday

The management of the CECIL THEATRE will again score a tremendous hit with its many customers when for four days starting next Saturday, May 16, it will offer Robert Montgomery in his first starring role "SHIPMATES", a spectacular story of navy life, which is a romantic narrative of the career of a dare devil sailor—filmed with the cooperation of the Navy Department. Montgomery is seen as a gob who during shore leave poses as a wealthy oil man and falls in love with a girl who later proves to be the Admiral's daughter The revelation of their identities presents a dramatic situation that is climaxed by his attempt at deserton after he strikes the officer Thrilling battle practice scenes and the burning of an amunition barge provides many moments of suspense.

The cast supporting Mr Montgomery is an excellent one consisting of Ernest Torrence, Dorothy Jorday. Hobart Bosworth. and Cliff Edwards

Taken all in alll the management feels certain that Robert Montgomery in "SHIPMATES" will be just about the best entertainment of the year

Special midnight show Saturday evening at 11.15 will be given as usual.

WEEDS CAUSE HEAVY LOSSES

Decrease Crop Yields and Soil Fertility and Cause Extra Work

Altho the actual loss to Iowa farmers caused by weeds cannot be definitely computed, it is known that the loss amounts to many millions of dollors annually, according to R. H Porter, plant pathologist in the extension service at Iowa State College, who is aiding Iowa farmers wth their weed control program

The acceptance of the weed eradication program as a major part of the county farm bureau program by more than two thirds of the Iowa counties is adequate proof that farmers are beginning to realize the seriousness of the situation, acording to Mr Porter.

Weeds not only crowd desirable crops and decrease the yield. but they rob the soil of valuable plant food and moisture. Some weeds are poisonous or injurious to livestock

DOINGS AT SCHOOL THE PAST WEEK

BACCALAUREATE SERVICE AT M. E. CHURCH SUNDAY EVE

Commencement Exercises On Next Week Thursday Evening

The Seniors were guests of the Juniors at a banquet in their honor last Friday night at the school gymnasium. A program of toasts and radio music and songs by the school featured the program after the good things prepared by the Ladies Aid were consumed. Paul Hughes, a Junior, acted as toastmaster and welcomed the graduating class and Floyd Klotzbach responded for the Seniors After the program of toasts and music the members of both classes and faculty members were assigned to cars and under directions proceeded to a treasure hunt. Some went east, others west and still others in other directions. Not all found their treasures which were intended for them but many others did.

On Tuesday of this week Miss Trumbell conducted the Senior class to our State Capital at Des Moines to learn all they could of Iowa, both past and present. Kenneth Gast Laurence Greimann. and Glenn Lange agreed to drive cars for the trip.

Our boys fulfilled our expectations at Swaledale last Friday evening defeating their opponents by a score of 9 to 2. We predict that Klemme High School will have a pretty good baseball team next school year They will play Crystal Lake here this Wednesday afternoon; and they will go to Britt on Friday afternoon.

On Sunday evening our baccalaureate services will be held in the Methodist Church at 8 o'clock. Rev. Whyte will give the sermon Our Girls Glee Club will sing. On Thursday night of next week will occur the commencement program with Atty. Chas. E. Miller of Alb... to give the address. Our High sch... orchestra will furnish the music.

We understand there will be a last day picnic as has been the custom in Klemme at the close of the school year. A big out door dinner will be enjoyed and all friends of the school will assemble for a good time We shall try to plan some games and a baseball contest for the occasion. Let all come.

We suggest that parents of school children see to it that all library books are returned to the school this week end. It often happens that books are taken home and mislaid and forgotten and the school library suffers.

BACCALAUREATE SERVICE SUN. EVENING AT M. E. CHURCH

The Class of 1931 of the Klemme High School will have their Baccalaureate Service at the Methodist Church Sunday evening beginning at 8:00 o'clock. A program is being arranged for the occasion and Rev H. E. Whyte will deliver the sermon to the graduates.

Burns Library Closed

Dunscore Parish library, founded in 1790 by Robert Burns, the poet, when farming at Ellisland, Scotland, has just been closed. Rural libraries, which were aided by the Carnegie trustees, have killed it. The books of the library are being given to recreation rooms in the district. Burns was the first librarian and membership was by subscription. In recent years there was too great a decrease in membership for it to survive.

Uses Tree as "Brake"

An East Boothbay (Maine) man drove through the back of his garage, as many new drivers are likely to do. But he vowed not to do it again and to make sure he fastened a strong piece of manila rope to a tree near the garage. When he comes in from a trip he fastens the loose end of the rope to the rear axle of his car and then drives into the garage secure in the knowledge that he will stop in the right place.

WOMEN SHOULD LEARN USES OF MAGNESIA

To women who suffer from nausea, or so-called "morning sickness," this is a blessing. Most nurses know it. It is advised by leading specialists:

Over a small quantity of finely cracked ice pour a teaspoonful of Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. Sip slowly until you are relieved. It ends sick stomach or inclination to vomit.

Its anti-acid properties make Phillips' Milk of Magnesia quick relief in heartburn, sour stomach, gas. Its mild laxative action assures regular bowel movement. Used as a mouth-wash it helps prevent tooth decay during expectancy.

In the Span of One Man's Lifetime

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

IN THE city of Chicago preparations are going forward rapidly for the world's fair, which it will hold in 1933. It is to be called the Century of Progress, and the keynote of the exposition will be a visualization of the part that the marvelous advance of science in the past century has played in industrial progress and in human welfare. In the way this is done, the exposition will be unlike any world's fair that has ever before been held. Accordingly, the exhibition buildings which are now in the process of construction will be different from any others that have ever before been erected. They will represent not only the architecture of today, but the architecture of the future. They will be "modernistic" to the last degree. That is, all of them will be—except one.

Along the lake front where the exposition will be held there already has been built a little structure of rough-hewn logs—Fort Dearborn of tragic memory, risen, phoenix-like, from the ashes of more than a century ago. And visitors to the world's fair in 1933 can look upon it against its background of skyscraper-lined Michigan avenue and in it, surrounded by the modernistic architecture buildings, see not only an epitome of the history of Chicago, but also an epitome of the history of the whole United States.

Marvelous as has been this transformation of a lonely frontier outpost with less than a hundred white inhabitants to a metropolis of more than three million, the fourth largest city in the world, there remains one amazing fact to make the story of Chicago's growth sound like a scarcely-believable fairy tale. For all of this has taken place within the span of one man's lifetime! That man is Nah-nee-num-skuk, a one hundred and twenty-one-year-old Pottawatomie Indian living on a reservation near Mayetta, Kan., who waos born in an Indian village on the present site of Chicago in 1809.

Since he was only three years old at the time of the Fort Dearborn massacre and the burning of the fort, he does not have any recollection of that tragedy, but he does remember the re-establishment of a military post at Chicago when the second Fort Dearborn was built in 1816 and the departure of the Pottawatomies from their ancestral lands for a new home in the West a few years later. It is problematical whether Nah-nee-num-skuk will still be alive when the world's fair is held in 1933, and whether he will be able to come back to the scene of his birth if he is still alive at that time. But the fact remains that today there lives a man who could stand in a city of teeming millions and recall the time when this spot was but little changed from what it must have been when the caravels of Columbus first touched the shores of the New world.

1. A photograph (taken at night) which illustrates vividly the contrast between the Old and the New. In the foreground is one of the blockhouses of the replica of the first Fort Dearborn, built for the World's Fair of 1933. In the background is the famous Chicago skyline, as seen from Lake Michigan, with its towering skyscrapers and its myriad of lights.

2. Nah-nee-num-skuk, one hundred and twenty-one-year old Pottawatomie born in an Indian village on the present site of Chicago, still living on an Indian reservation at Mayetta, Kan.

3. A century of mail transportation progress was dramatized in Chicago recently when a message was borne from the replica of the first Fort Dearborn to New York by horse, automobile and airplane. In the photograph John Manson, a great-grandson of the builder of Fort Dearborn, is shown receiving the message addressed to the postmaster of New York from Col. John Sewall. He carried it to the Chicago post office where it was placed with other mail in an automobile truck and taken to the municipal airport, where it was placed on an air mail plane.

But the survival of this one hundred and twenty-one year old "native" of Chicago is not the only evidence of the amazing transformation that has taken place on the shores of Lake Michigan. Recently there took place in Chicago an incident which afforded a dramatic contrast between the Old and the New. Through the gates of the rebuilt Fort Dearborn one morning rode John Manson, dressed in the military uniform of the style worn by his great-grandfather, the builder of the original Fort Dearborn. He was carrying a letter addressed to the postmaster of New York city. Through the maze of automobile traffic on Michigan avenue he made his way to the Chicago post office where his letter was dropped into a mail sack which was tossed into an automobile truck and rushed out to the municipal airport. There it was taken aboard an air mail plane and that evening the letter was placed in the hands of the New York postmaster—less than 12 hours from the time it had left Fort Dearborn.

Had such a letter been dispatched from the Fort Dearborn of a century ago it would have been weeks—and possibly months—before it was delivered in New York. For as one historian has put it "'From November until May Fort Dearborn was as isolated from the outside world as though it were on another planet. We have in epitome the story of the failure of one attempt, made by Captain Whistler in December, 1809, to break this isolation. He obtained a month's leave-of-absence to journey to Cincinnati. Today the round trip may be made and a fair day's business transacted in 24 hours. Whistler left Chicago the last of November and reached Fort Wayne, Ind., December 10, 'much fatigued after 11 days of wairy travel through rain and snow,' as he tells it in a letter. The water was so high that his further progress was prevented. Finding it impossible, should he proceed, to be back at his post by the end of the month, he prepared to return to Fort Dearborn, grateful to his superior for the opportunity accorded him as though he had succeeded in making the journey."

The historian quoted in the foregoing is Milo M. Quaife in his book "Chicago and the Old Northwest." That book was published only 18 years ago. But how soon in these modern times may a statement be out of date! "Today the round trip may be made and a fair day's business transacted in 24 hours," writes the historian in 1913. But the historian of 1931, after consulting the time-tables of the air transport companies which now carry passengers to all parts of the United States, would write it "Today the round trip may be made and a fair day's business transacted in 12 hours." And if you would retrace Captain Whistler's journey to Fort Wayne and do it in an airplane, you could cover in a little over an hour the distance it took him 11 days to make.

What was true of the isolation of the first Fort Dearborn was nearly as true of the second. "One day in October, 1817, a year after the establishment of the second Fort Dearborn, Samuel A. Storrow, who was making a tour through the Northwest, appeared on the north bank of the Chicago river, and shortly after entered the fort, where he was received 'as one arrived from the moon,'" writes Quaife. "The little establishment at Fort Dearborn constituted a miniature world, with interests and ambitions quite detached from those of the larger world outside."

Such were the conditions which existed during the early history of Chicago—the era of the two Fort Dearborns. That era came to an end in 1833 with the events, the centennial of which furnishes the reason for the exposition two years hence. One of these was the incorporation of Chicago as a town, decided upon at a meeting held on August 5, 1833, at the Sauganash hotel, Chicago's first hostelry, where a total of 12 votes was cast for incorporation and one against and the town election held five days later when 28 votes were cast, electing four trustees and a president of the town board. (By way of contrast it may be remarked that in the recent election to choose a "world's fair mayor" for Chicago, more than 1,000,000 votes were cast.) The other events was the convening in September, 1833, of the greatest Indian council ever held in Chicago at which the Pottawattomies and allied tribes ceded all their lands west of Lake Michigan and their remaining reservation in southwestern Michigan, a tract of some five million acres, to the United States and agreed to remove beyond the Mississippi river within three years.

TALES ... of the TRIBES

By EDITHA L. WATSON

The Dakota (Sioux)

The ideal Indian—superb of physique, mentally keen and alert, and with a high standard of morals—is best typified by the Dakota, now known as the Sioux.

The Dakota (Sioux).

This magnificent people dominated all the surrounding tribes, with the exception of the Chippewa, with whom they were continually at war. This powerful tribe in its expansion pushed its neighbors slowly away, and the pressure even affected the Sioux, who resisted valiantly but nevertheless retreated gradually in a southwestward direction, driving before them the Cheyenne and the Kiowa. In this manner they reached the Black Hills country, and here they settled.

The Dakota was not exactly a confederation, yet it was made up of seven council fires, consisting of eight divisions, each of which is well-known in history—and with good reason. From their first mention in the Jesuit Relations of 1640, the Sioux tribes have been liberally included in accounts of the country. Their efficient fighters, who feared nothing, swept across the plains like prairie fires, as brilliant and as destructive. They made "good copy" even in those days. The early historians also found much of interest to write about in the persons of the Sioux; for instance, Wanotan, a Yanktonai chief, was described in 1823 as being dressed in a splendid robe of whitened buffalo skins. He wore a necklace of grizzly bear claws, and his leggings, jacket, and moccasins were of white skins ornamented with human hair.

In later years, when the struggle agianst white supremacy reached its height, the movements of the Sioux tribes were a matter of intense interest.

The Tetons, who had moved farthest west, were the principal division of the Dakota people. This great "tribe" was composed of seven others, of which the Hunkpapa, Miniconjou and Sihasapa were the last Sioux to go on reservations. These tribes even defied the "Great White Father," and insisted that they did not want gifts, but the right to go to war and take scalps, as they had always done. The Ogallala, another Teton tribe were the terror of the frontier.

It was said of the Teton tribes that they had "all the Indian virtues of bravery, cunning, treachery, and hospitality." They were foes to all but each other. These wild, independent people held their land against the whites as long as they could, and it is impossible not to admire them.

The Sioux uprising of 1862 shows plainly to what lengths these people would go. Little Crow and the Mdewakantons (who had come into more intimate contact with the whites than any other band) tried to wipe out the settlers in Minnesota, and 800 whites were killed in this war, in which several of the Sioux tribes participated. Some of the most horrible cruelties known to history were committed by the Indians at this time.

However, not all the Sioux were so malignant. It was a Yankton chief who warned the Minnesotans of the impending uprising, and saved hundreds of lives thereby.

When gold was discovered in the Black Hills the miners who crowded into Sioux territory precipitated a fierce outbreak. We cannot blame the Sioux for resenting the invasion of these uncouth and conscienceless men, but, for the good of the growing states, they had to be subdued. Almost the final battle of this period was Custer's famous "last stand" on the Little Bighorn, June 15, 1876, which has attained such a prominent place in the history of the West. Sitting Bull, Hunkpapa chief, was the medicine man of the Indians on this occasion.

The so-called Sioux uprising of 1890, during which Sitting Bull was killed, was the result of the "Ghost Dance" excitement. It is alleged that the Indian agents on the Sioux reservation were utterly incompetent, and the lack of promised rations, a serious matter for people accustomed to rove as they would to provide for themselves, was perhaps the underlying cause of the outbreak. Hunger and fear are very real sensations, and when in their trouble the Sioux heard that a revelation had been given, their excitement led to the outbreak.

This revelation from the God of the red men foretold a new dispensation, when the whites would be driven out, and the Indians would attain their former status. The songs and dances which the prophet gave induced a hypnotic condition, and in these trances the Sioux became once more the magnificent lords of the land.

The awakening was harsh. Sitting Bull, whose strong personality had imbued his tribesmen and kept them in a fever of unrest, was dead, and Gen. Nelson A. Miles rode into the picture. His was also a strong personality, and he had trained troops at his back.

The attack of the Second French army, although made astride the Meuse river, was directed principally against Hill Mort Homme and Hill 304, both famous in the struggle of 1916. To destroy the wire entanglements and demolish trenches, as a precaution against heavy losses, the infantry assault was preceded by four days' continuous bombardment, and relatively the amount of artillery ammunition expended exceeded that of any previous engagement, its value being, as I remember it, some $75,000,000.

The proportion of the artillery force as compared to the infantry in this battle was as eleven to ten. The firing attained such precision and volume that the German troops in the forward positions were submerged and the attacking infantry reached most of its objectives by nightfall the first day, making an advance of five kilometers and capturing 6,000 prisoners.

The sector where the French attack took place was to have a peculiar interest for me before the end of the war. My headquarters as commander of the first army one year later occupied the building in Souilly, then used by Major General Guillaumat, and the line reached by Corvisart's troops in the battle became our jump-off line in the Meuse-Argonne battle. In fact, every foot of the ground covered in this inspection with General Petain became associated later with America's greatest effort in the war.

Petain's Contact Valuable.

After visiting the French installations and the manifold activities carried on behind this front with the shifting masses of combat troops and the thousands engaged in the services of supply and transportation, it seemed quite improbable that we should be able to marshal a sufficient army in time to replace the French on this front before 1919.

I found it most agreeable as well as instructive to be with Petain in this intimate way and have an opportunity to hear something of his experience. His discussion of the defense of Verdun, in which he played an important part, being second in command, was especially entertaining. As we drove about he spoke of the courage of his troops and of the tremendous losses they had sustained. He pointed out the vast amount of road work, including the Voie Sacree from Bar-le-Duc to Verdun, rebuilt under his direction for the constant movements of large bodies of troops and supplies necessary to maintain the defense.

In lighter vein his comments on French politicians during this trip were amusing, if not always complimentary, and he congratulated me many times on being so far removed from political interference. One afternoon the conversation drifted to painting and he asked me how many times I had sat for my portrait. "Several times already," I said. "The last one, which was very good, was done by a distinguished artist by the name of Jonas (English Jonah) for l'Illustration."

Immediately he said: "Don't let them publish it! Don't do it! Every officer whose portrait by Jonas has appeared in that journal has been relieved from his command."

Not that I am superstitious, quite the contrary, but I immediately forbade the publication of the portrait and to this day it has never appeared.

Builds Up French Morale.

From the time of Nivelle's failure in April the depression in the French armies had been so great that Petain, who succeeded him, had been content simply to hold the trenches, and no French offensive operation of consequence had been attempted until this one. From the moment of his assignment Petain began to build up the shattered morale of his armies and probably no other officer in France could have performed the task so well.

Petain's immense success in the defense of Verdun had won for him the confidence of the army and the country, and yet he remained the same modest, unassuming character, consistent and conservative. He, perhaps better than any other, understood the temperament of the French soldier, whom he handled with infinite patience and tact.

Yanks Learning to Use the Bayonet.

CHAPTER XII

In view of the gravity of our tonnage situation, it was highly important that it be brought forcibly to the attention of the allies. Apropos the approaching inter-allied conference on shipping, I cabled Washington August 23, 1917, in part as follows: ". . . The British and, especially, the French have reached absolute limit of man power and any augmentation their military force cannot be expected. Imperative hasten our organization and training so that we will have the troops contemplated your project in Europe for active service by May or June.

"Military activities of allies on land should be strongly reinforced by combined navies and destruction U-boat bases accomplished if possible. High British army officers confidentially condemn waiting policy British admiralty. . . . In view of gravity of shipping question recommend our government insist upon aggressive policy by combined British and American navies.

". . . Our position in this war very strong. . . . Allies now fully recognize dependence upon our co-operation and we need not hesitate demand both aggressive naval policy and full share commercial shipping. Recommend American representative shipping conference be instructed accordingly."

U. S. Advised on Powder Needs.

Meanwhile, a study by a joint French and American commission of the question of production of powders and explosives in France showed that the greater part of the raw materials must be imported and that, due to the shipping situation, France in December would produce only about half of the current output. It was apparent, therefore, that to avoid calamity the United States must not only furnish powder and explosives for all of its own forces, but must supply about half the French requirements, and the War department was so advised.

By this arrangement a large saving of tonnage would be effected, as the weight of raw materials was ten to twenty times that of the finished product. As nitrates for the manufacture of powder and explosives had to be imported from Chili, the hazard to shipping would be reduced by avoiding the long haul to France. Millions of dollars were expended in the construction of plants at home in an attempt to produce nitrates, but none had been turned out before the end of the war.

Dawes Made Supply Chief.

In view of the uncertainty of obtaining more than a limited amount of ocean tonnage it was natural that we should procure abroad as large a proportion of supplies as possible, and our supply department began at once to make inquiries to meet the demands for construction material, subsistence stores and engineering equipment. Many sources of general supply had been developed by the French and we soon found ourselves not only in competition with them and the British but our different departments also began to bid against each other.

To my mind the solution seemed to be merely a matter of co-ordination. Therefore, I established a purchasing board to consist of one or more representatives of each service making purchases of any sort, including the Red Cross and Y. M. C. A.

Lieut. Col. Charles G. Dawes, Seventeenth engineers, well known as a man of large business experience, was appointed as the head of this board, the members of which were to meet together and make known their respective needs and then agree among themselves as to where and by which department such purchase was to be made, thus mutually assisting instead of competing with each other. Under the arrangement co-operation with the French was established and the agency became increasingly effective in handling our procurement activities.

Couldn't Depend on French R. R.'s.

The use of railways for the movement of troops and supplies had never before attained any such proportions as in the World war and there was no service except sea transportation upon which we placed greater dependence for our success.

It was apparent that we could not depend on the French without great risk of failure at a critical moment and it was evident that if we expected the maximum efficiency in this service we must provide our own personnel as well as additional locomotives and cars, all to be as far as practicable under American management.

With this plan in view commendable progress had been made toward both procurement and organization by Colonel Taylor, and complete estimates for rolling stock and construction at ports, terminals and yards, including an accurate survey of building and equipment requirements, had been made under his direction by Maj. W. J. Wilgus, formerly vice president of the New York Central, afterward a colonel, who had been a member of the Parsons board. These estimates without change served as a permanent guide for railway construction plans and material.

Creation of Transportation Corps.

As co-ordinate with the procurement and maintenance of material and equipment we were confronted with the vital question of organization for operation and management, but we had no officers in the regular service of sufficient experience in railway management to insure success. Therefore the evident course to pursue, to which the precedent of both British and French pointed the way, was to create a transportation corps immediately under the direction of some man of outstanding reputation in the railroad world. In accordance with the principle of obtaining the most competent men for important positions the following cable was sent July 29:

"Have made thorough study of railroad situation and am convinced that operation of railroads must be under man with large experience in managing railroads at home. Successful handling our railroad lines so important that ablest men in country should be selected. After almost disastrous results with inexperienced military men running railroads British selected ablest man could find to have charge transportation.

"Question here mainly one of physical operation and management in intimate relation with French, who retain general control, which is necessary to handle ordinary commercial traffic. Question of railroad transportation of course involves equipment, maintenance and new construction at front as army advances, and should be practically independent department, although nominally under engineers. Railman chosen should be sent here without delay, together with three or four able assistants of his own selection. Later on it is believed these men should be given appropriate military rank."

In reply, the War department recommended W. W. Atterbury, then general manager and now president of the Pennsylvania railroad, for the place, and I immediately requested that he be sent to France.

CHAPTER XIII

The most important question that confronted us in the preparation of our forces of citizen soldiery for efficient service was training. Except for the Spanish-American war nearly twenty years before, actual combat experience of the regular army had been limited to the independent action of minor commands in the Philippines and to two expeditions into Mexico, each with forces smaller than a modern American division.

The World war involved the handling of masses where even a division was relatively a small unit. It was one thing to call 1,000,000 or 2,000,000 men to the colors, and quite another thing to transform them into an organized, instructed army capable of meeting and holding its own in battle against the best trained force in Europe with three years' actual war experience to its credit.

A general scheme of schools for the A. E. F. was prepared by the operations and training section, but in order that this instruction should be as complete and uniform as possible and at the same time be co-ordinated with other activities, I declared that training should be handled by officers who could devote their entire time to it. An additional section of the headquarters staff therefore was established, called the training section, to function under my personal direction. As chief of this section Col. Paul B. Malone was chosen, with Col. H. B. Fiske as his assistant.

The British methods of teaching trench warfare appealed to me very strongly. They taught their men to be aggressive and undertook to perfect them in hand-to-hand fighting with bayonet, grenade and dagger. A certain amount of this kind of training was necessary to stimulate the morale of troops by giving them confidence in their own personal prowess.

Through the kindness of Sir Douglas Haig we were fortunate early in our experience to have assigned to us Lieut. Gen. R. H. K. Butler and other officers of the British army to assist in this individual training.

Later on several French and British officers also came to lecture at a number of our schools.

We found difficulty, however, in using these allied instructors in that the French and, to a large extent, the British had practically settled down to the conviction that developments since 1914 had changed the principles of warfare. Both held that new conditions imposed by trench fighting had rendered previous conceptions of training more or less obsolete and that preparation for open warfare no longer was necessary. French publications and manuals were generally in accord with this theory.

If the French doctrine had prevailed our instruction would have been limited to a brief period of training for trench fighting. A new army brought up entirely on such principles would have been seriously handicapped without the protection of the trenches. It would probably have lacked the aggressiveness to break through the enemy's lines and the knowledge of how to carry on thereafter.

It was evident that the victory could not be won by the costly process of attrition, but that we should have to drive the enemy out into the open and engage him in a war of movement. Instruction in open warfare was based upon individual and group initiative, resourcefulness and tactical judgment, which were of equal advantage in trench warfare.

Therefore, we took decided issue with the allies, and, without neglecting thorough preparations for trench warfare, undertook to train mainly for open warfare, with the object from the start of vigorously forcing the offensive.

Rifle Practice Urged.

Intimately connected with the question of training for open warfare was the matter of rifle practice. The earliest of my cablegrams on this subject was in August, in which it was urged that thorough instruction in rifle practice should be carried on at home because of the difficulty of giving it in France:

"Study here shows value and desirability of retaining our existing small arms target practice course. In view of great difficulty in securing range in France due to density of the population and cultivation, recommend as fast as practicable the complete course be given in the United States before troops embark. Special emphasis should be placed on rapid fire."

My view was that the rifle and bayonet still remained the essential weapons of infantry, and my cable stressing the fact that the basic principles of warfare had not changed, were sent in an endeavor to influence the courses of training at home. Unfortunately, however, no fixed policy of instruction in the various arms, under a single authority, ever was carried out there.

Insensible to advice, the inclination was to accept the views of French specialists and limit training to the narrow field of trench warfare. Therefore, in large measure, the fundamentals so thoroughly taught at West Point for a century were more or less neglected.

The responsibility for the failure of the War department to take positive action on my recommendations in such matters must fall upon the military head of the department, which was the general staff.

There were other causes, as we shall see later, that led to confusion and irregularity in training to such an extent that we often were compelled during the last stages of the war to send men into battle with little knowledge of warfare and often with no rifle practice at all.

Military Police Provided.

The maintenance of good order among our troops under the peculiar conditions of service in France was most important, and for this purpose a military police was essential. Such a force, under the control of provost marshal general, corresponded to the police department in a well-organized city, except that its jurisdiction included only those in the military service. The British, whose situation was similar to our own, gave us helpful information regarding their system, which, with a slight modification, was adopted for our armies.

In our previous wars, the provost guard, so called, usually consisted of troops of the line detailed for the purpose, but without any special training for such duty.

Col. Hanson Ely was selected to organize the police corps and made a good beginning in laying the foundation, but, at his own request, he was shortly relieved and sent to regimental duty. His successor, Col. W. H. Allaire, became provost marshal general until the following July, when he was relieved by Col. J. C. Groome.

Brig. Gen. H. H. Bandholtz, on account of his special fitness for such work from his experience as chief of constabulary in the Philippine islands, became the permanent head of the corps in September, 1918.

Due credit must be given to each of these officers, but particularly to Bandholtz, for the smart appearance and the high efficiency of this force.

The military police were indispensable in directing and handling traffic during combat activities, in preventing straggling and in maintaining order among scattered groups of our armies both before and after the armistice.

The organization November 1, 1918, numbered 463 officers and 15,912 men, spread over the whole of France.

A LOW-COST GAS SERVICE FOR ALL

No Matter Where You Live You Can Light, Heat and Cook With Gas

It may seem strange, but it is true nevertheless, that while many city folks are complaining about high gas rates, thousands of rural folks are enjoying modern gas service for lighting, heating and cooking at low cost. Stranger still is the fact that these country residents are far from any gas mains.

Here's the answer: Along with the many other improvements for the farm and rural communities has come pressure gas appliances for the home. These new inventions have especially been a boon to the housewife. They lighten her work, save her time, and add no small measure of contentment to every member of the family.

Pressure gas appliances make and burn their own gas from regular untreated motor fuel. There are modern cook stoves that fry, bake or broil—roast, toast or boil, just like the regular city gas range. There are lamps and lanterns that produce 200 to 300 candlepower of pure white light; radiant heaters that produce healthful heat; self-heating irons without cords or tubes; water heaters, utility stoves, etc.

Inventive genius has made these appliances safe and dependable. They are complete in themselves. There are no pipes to connect up; no installation costs of any kind. They produce a clear, blue gas flame that is actually hotter than city gas.

In obtaining better light for all the family, easier cooking facilities, and quicker, cleaner heat through the use of these appliances, the modern farm housewife had bid good-by to many old time drudgeries. No longer does she have to clean the old oil lamp chimneys and trim the wicks; no longer is there coal or wood to litter up the kitchen; or ashes to carry out; no more blackened pots and pans to scour. And on ironing day she no longer carries heavy sad-irons back and forth from stove to ironing boards.

That's real farm relief for the women folks!—Adv.

THIS DAY OF SCHEMES

The unemployment situation thru the country has provided a rich harvest for the type of citizen who makes his living by hatching up schemes for separating the unwar. from their money. Hundreds of new grafts have sprung up within th past few months. Fake mail orde. papers are full of them; everythin from raising rabbits in your bac. yard to coloring cards for Christmas But in every instance, it should be remembered by the Klemme citizen who is tempted to answer any of these ads, the promoter is going to get his money first. Always there is an "outfit" to buy or a deposit of some kind to make—that you take a long chance on getting back. Of course, there are some legitimate work at home schemes. But they are few when the total number of offer is considered. All of which means that you cannot be to careful when answering such advertisements. One good thing to bear in mind is tha. "a fool and his money are soon parted". And there is always some body ready to separate you from i. if you are foolish enough to inves without investigating.

Rodin's Famous Statue

Rodin's statue, the "Thinker," was exhibited at the Georges Petit gallery in 1889. It was one of 38 pieces of sculpture placed on view. It was designed to be placed over the Porte de l'Enfer. The idea of fashioning it was largely due to Rodin's visit to Italy in 1875. The sculptor was commissioned by M. Turquet, who told Rodin that he wished to have a door for the proposed palace of decorative arts. The "Thinker" is part of Rodin's "Magnum Opus." At the salon of 1904 the figure was on exhibition. It was planned to be placed on the upper crossbeam of the gate of hell, where the "Thinker" could look down on the scenes of human passion and woe extended below him. By public subscription the statue was ultimately purchased and presented to the city of Paris.

Cure for Insomnia

One of the most amazing cures for insomnia is that discovered by Mr. Percival Boyd. He is a member of the Society of Genealogists and finding some time ago that he could not sleep he embarked upon the task of compiling a complete index of the marriages that took place in England and Wales between 1538 and 1837. Mr. Boyd has already compiled a list of 1,400,000 in 139 volumes. So good is the index that the record of any marriage can be found in five minutes. Letters and slips containing information arrive daily. It is calculated by Mr. Boyd, that at the present rate of progress the work will take a hundred years to complete. He cannot get on any faster because his task makes him so sleepy. He has found his cure.

Scallops Led to Water

The scallop season is not long and the persons who are employed in it must make the best of the time with the result that in some sections of Long Island and New England the school sessions are curtailed in order to allow the children to do their part. But the government will not permit of any irregularity in the handling of this delicacy and recently a New England fish dealer was fined $1,000 for "watering" scallops. When treated to an ordinary bath the scallops take on size and weight so that an unscrupulous dealer is really selling water at the price of scallops.

Cheese for Children

Formerly mothers would have been shocked if it had been suggested that young children be given cheese. Today the up-to-date nursery schools frequently offer it.—Woman's Home Companion.

Paw-Paw Tree Products Put to Various Uses

Papuya, or paw-paw trees, which grow in the tropical jungles of South America, are put to various uses. They are versatile in that they furnish food, medicine and soap. The Field Museum of Natural History, in Chicago, which has one of these trees in its botany exhibit, states emphatically that the tree is not to be regarded as a link between the animal and vegetable worlds. The tropical paw-paw tree is described as an odd-looking affair, tapering from the base of the stem to a height of about 20 feet. It exudes a peculiar juice which, rubbed on meat, will make the toughest beefsteak as tender as venison, according to Popular Science Monthly. The natives living in the districts where the paw-paw tree abounds use the juice for this purpose. The juice is an acid, milky substance and has medicinal value. The seeds are used as an effective vermifuge or worm destroyer. Furthermore, the tree has a delicious fruit. It is large, pulpy, oblong in shape, and has a heavy rind.

Ruby Rates Above Diamond

A ruby is harder than any stone except the diamond. Carat for carat, rubies of the first quality are rarer and consequently more valuable than diamonds of a corresponding grade. No other stone increases as rapidly in value in proportion to increase in weight as this.

One peculiar property of the ruby is that it becomes green upon exposure to high temperature but regains its original color on cooling. Dark red rubies are found in Siam, and purplish ones in Ceylon, but Burma alone may claim the wonderful pigeon's blood ruby. A cloudy variety exists also which, when cut with a convex surface, exhibits a luminous star, giving it its name of star-ruby.

Odd Methods of Fishing

Natives of some sections of India have several unusual methods of catching fish, Popular Mechanics Magazine says. In Assam, fishermen crouch on the banks of shallow lakes and emit a shrill whistle which attracts a species of mountain fish. Lured by the sound, this fish darts into the open palms of the whistler and is caught. In other places the direct rays of the sun force mountain fish to seek shelter beneath or beside rocks along the banks of streams. The cunning hillman crawls to a bowlder behind which a fish is hiding, strikes the rock a heavy blow with his steel-shod club, and catches the fish, stunned by the sound vibrations.

His Move

In the wee hours of a recent morning a group of grownup kids emerged from a restaurant, went into a huddle on a prominent corner at the direction of a lad whose fiery red hair waved in the breeze from the broken places of a crushed derby, and began to harmonize. Soon the deserted city canyon was ringing with the strains of "Here we are together!"

The young cop on the beat listened for a moment, then turned the other way and started down the street. "I guess I'll go down here and look for robbers," he said.—Pittsburgh Post-Gazette.

Every Variety of Song in the Lives of Russians

In Russia music has always been closely connected with the lives of the people. From the time of birth through all the events of life until death claims them, they move to a musical accompaniment. The return of spring is celebrated by a sort of choral dance, termed the khorovod; marriage, being a most important time, brings forth many songs, such as "The Birchwood Splinter" ("Lootchins"), "Glorification," "The Matchmaker" ("Svat oushka"). There are boating songs, laboring songs, lullabies and dance songs. Most of the dance tunes are in the major mode, the slow tunes, and these are best liked in the minor. Cesar Cui, in his book "La Musique en Russie," divided the Russian composers into three groups: First, the old lyric school, Glinka Darkomizsky and Seroff; second, the New-Russians, Rimsky-Korsakoff, Mussorgsky, Borodin, and lastly Rubinstein and Tschaikowski in a class by themselves as being less distinctively national.—Washington Star.

Eagle as a Symbol

The eagle stood for two things in ancient symbolism. The Greek name for the monarch of the air was a word meaning "rapid motion." The deeply mystic Hebrews, after watching the great bird sitting motionless, contemplating the sun, gave it a name which meant "meditation." In early Christian art the eagle became the symbol of spiritual power, because it was able to soar tirelessly through the highest places. The lion was the symbol of human pride and temporal power.

Engraving Is Ancient Art

Engraving dates back to the ancients, but the first authentic engraving of which there is any record was that of St. Christopher, 1423. Baron de Heiffenberg claims to have found an earlier one, dated 1418, and a manuscript discovered in the middle of the Eighteenth century gives reason for believing that the art was known as early as 1306 in England, but there has been too much controversy concerning those prior to St. Christopher to accredit the earlier ones.

Legendary Potentate

Prester John was a semi-mythical potentate of the Middle ages, believed to reign over a Christian kingdom in the Far East. It is, however, certain that no Christian potentate ruled in Asia in the Twelfth century, though the legend must have had some basis in fact. Prester John has been variously identified with a certain Mongol chief and with the founder of the Khara Khitai, who called himself "Gur Khan or "Supreme Khan." The legend of Prester John's existence provided a continual stimulus to medieval exploration.

Adobe Now Turned Out by Modern Machinery

The lowly adobe has gone modern. No longer is use of this cheap and once proletarian building material restricted to the Mexican peon and to the lonely homesteader. The sun-dried mud block of the West, says the Los Angeles Times, has been adopted by the people of means and by the Twentieth century builder accustomed to working in stone, and concrete, and brick, and lumber.

Modern machinery is now employed in the manufacture of the adobes. Once the mud and the straw which helps to hold it together were mixed by bare feet treading industriously in a big box, a trough or a mere puddle in the ground. Now this is accomplished by a concrete mixer.

The tradition that only a Mexican can make good adobes has been exploded in Arizona and the veil of semi-mystery thrown about the art has been rent. Formerly it was thought that the "paisano" possessed some mysterious sixth sense, some faculty inherited from remote Indian ancestors which no mere white man could hope to acquire. Now it is known that any competent workman can turn out adobes as durable as any molded by the Aztecs before the days of Cortez, and a really bright one is likely to figure out improvements in the process.

Great Moghul Emperor Also Inventive Genius

India never had a greater king than Akbar, the Moghul, who at thirteen years of age found himself shouldered with the cares of an empire which showed unmistakable signs of collapsing into ruins. During the 40 years of this remarkable man's power he turned back the tides of dissolution, rebuilt his kingdom, enlarged and extended it throughout India, brought it under unity of organization. He died in 1605.

Akbar was a great lover of sports and hunting. He rode with all the address of his Moghul ancestors. His courage was reckless and astounding—once inducing him to attack with but 40 followers a whole hostile army, which was promptly routed. He disliked luxury and was a modest eater. His spare time, during the earlier years of his rule, was given over to inventions. One of these was a machine for cleaning 16 guns simultaneously, and another a device for firing off 17 cannon at the same time. Both aided him greatly in his campaigns.—Boston Globe.

"House in the Wood"

Situated in The Hague wood in Holland is the famous "House in the Woods"—a royal villa erected about 1645 for the widow of Frederic Henry of Orange. Here Mary Stuart, wife of William II, passed the happiest years of her life. At The Hague in 1899 was held the international peace conference. The Hague is rapidly extending to the popular seaside resort of Scheveningen. Close to this popular resort is the Peace palace, erected at a cost of $1,500,000, donated by Andrew Carnegie. The foundation stone was laid July 30, 1907, and bears the inscription: "Paci justia firmandae hanc aedem Andreae Cornegii munificentia dedicavit." The building was founded after the first peace conference and was intended to be the meeting place of the permanent court of arbitration.

Unwelcome Reform

Queen Victoria's bonnets belong to history. Mrs. A. M. W. Stirling, sister-in-law of William de Morgan, the novelist, has told in her reminiscences, "Life's Little Day," how her mother who patronized the same milliner as did the queen, once begged the bonnet maker to become a "national benefactor and persuade the queen to wear less hideous bonnets."

"Oh, madam, I did try," cried the milliner in despair. "I ventured to modify the shape ever so little and put a pretty bow at the side, and they were sent back to me with a crushing message: 'What her majesty requires is a bonnet—not a cap.'"—Kansas City Star.

Ancient Slave Ship

Comparatively sound, despite its great age, the hull of the only remaining slave ship known to have brought "black ivory" to the coast of North America lies drawn up on the beach at St. Croix, Virgin islands. The vessel, the property of Cornelius Penthony, bears the name of the Vigilant. She was operated under the Danish flag until slavery was abolished in the Virgin islands in 1848. Both before and after that time she was engaged in the slave trade, landing slaves illegally in United States territory, Cuba, Porto Rico and Brazil.

Lawmakers Rowed to Work

Washington's first legislature, says an article in the Seattle Times, with two exceptions, was composed of west side men, the two from the east side of the Cascades being representatives of Clark county, which at that time spread all over eastern Washington. Nearly the entire membership journeyed to and from the capital in boats, and it required two good days at the oars to reach Olympia from Seattle, a journey more or less hazardous.

Durable Food

We once put a mark on the edge of a railroad lunch-counter sandwich and found it there two years later. It had been newly half-soled, but it was the same sandwich.—Woman's Home Companion.

Washington Not Hailed as "Second Cincinnatus"

George Washington has sometimes been called "the second Cincinnatus" in allusion to his having been called to the Presidency from his plantation at Mount Vernon, to which he retired after having voluntarily resigned his commission as commander in chief of the army. But it was William Henry Harrison, who was called from his estate at North Bend, on the Ohio river, to be the ninth President of the United States, who was termed "the Cincinnatus of the West."

In both of these instances the allusion is to the story of the Roman historian, Livy, relating that in the year 458 B. C., when the Aequi and Volsci had shut up the Roman consul, Lucius Minucius, and his army in a defile, and, Rome itself being in great danger, the Roman senate, in alarm, had made Lucius Quintius Cincinnatus dictator, the messengers sent to inform him of his appointment, found him at the plow. Modern investigators, however, have pronounced the most attractive parts of the story fiction.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Dense Sulphurous Fog Precursor of Plague

In his "Scenes and Legends," Hugh Miller relates that "one night in the month of August, 1694, a cold east wind, accompanied by a dense sulphurous fog, passed over the country, and the half-filled corn was struck with mildew. It shrank and whitened in the sun, till the fields seemed as if sprinkled with flour, and where the fog had remained longest—for in some places it stood up like a chain of hills during the greater part of the night—the more disastrous were its effects." In November, a pestilence broke out, when many of the people were seized by "strange fevers, and sore fluxes of a most infectious nature." In the parish of West Calder, out of 900 persons 300 were swept away, and in a little village called the Craigs, inhabited by only six or eight families, there were 30 corpses in the space of a few days.—London Mail.

Air Scout's Pledge

The oath of the Air Scouts is as follows: "I am an Air Scout! I am living to the best of my ability the Scout oath and law. I believe in the slogan 'Safety in the Air.' I know that a healthy mind and body are the greatest factors of airworthiness. I shall strive to further aviation by applying the principles of scouting in all matters pertaining to flying. I shall always remember that a good flyer is an efficient flyer, and that efficiency comes through application. I will never forget that an Air Scout is first, last and always a Boy Scout, that he practices self-control, is a clear thinker, is cool-headed, a student of aviation and has respect for experience."

Airplanes and Birds

It has been asked, "Why can't airplanes be made to fly as the bird flies?" La Technique Aeronautique says: "It is well known that the primary feathers of a bird's wing are distinctly separated, while in flapping flight. Tests made on models simulating this construction showed that the lift increased three times, and drag increased nine times. One of the most important assets of the bird's wing is its flexibility and control—a condition exceedingly difficult to copy mechanically. Many scientists are studying the flight of birds to find any hitherto overlooked details of nature's technique that will help man in mechanical flying. When inventors produce a material that has the strength, weight ratio of feathers and the hollow bones of birds with an engine which has the efficiency of a bird's digestive system and muscles, it will then be easy to build an airplane as safe as a bird."—Washington Star.

"Duce's" Greeting to America

The National Broadcasting company says that the first international program ever broadcast from Italy to the United States was staged on January 1, 1931, when Premier Benito Mussolini, speaking from Fascist headquarters in Rome, sent his New Year greeting to America through coast-to-coast networks. This was the first program ever heard in this country originating on the Italian mainland. Twice before, however, listeners had heard programs from Italian waters—from the yacht of Senators Guglielmo Marconi, the father of radio, anchored off the coast of the peninsula.

Keep Up Old Custom

It is significant that, although in the country, owing no doubt to stress of circumstances, many old customs have died out, in London ceremonies distantly connected with them still linger. For instance, farmers once gave their laborers the traditional "Plow Monday Supper" to celebrate the beginning of another year's plowing.

It would be hard to find a farm where the custom is still kept up, but the lord mayor keeps the festival by giving a Plow Monday dinner to all the officials of the city corporation.—London Morning Post.

Happiness

Joy is a condition of the mind and heart, not a circumstance of environment. It is something we create, not a gift from the world. The real secret of happiness is not in doing what one likes, but in liking what one does.—Grit.

bor's Liberty Legion Out for Modification of Dry Law —Governor Roosevelt Dismisses Charges Against Mayor Walker.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

thew Woll

LABOR'S LIBERTY Legion, as it is termed by Matthew Woll, vice president of the American Federation of Labor, is in action for the purpose of bringing about modification of the Volstead act and eventually the repeal of the Eighteenth amendment. It consists of a national mittee of the organized trades, It held a two day convention in adelphia that was attended by t 200 delegates from all parts of country. Mr. Woll was in the r, and he did not mince words in ing the aims of those workers are opposed to prohibition, and imes his language was almost in- matory. He declared the groups ch "forced" prohibition on the try were the industrialists "who e prompted by the desire to in- se their profits through higher uction by making machines of hu- labor," and the church groups o have admitted their failure to man by moral suasion, but seek force their rule by the use of the stick of the law."

sserting that he did not believe "milk and water methods," Mr. l continued. "There is too much and order today. I want to see shackles of i junction broken, if by lawful methods, then through sical resentment. It is only by ag- siveness that states and com- nities will regain their privileges. Our nation came into being through iolent disregard of law and order. negro was freed by bloody strife, complete desregard of law and er. Labor unions came into being won for American labor its high ndards of living, through strikes, routs and other violent methods."

report to the committee, written Woll and I. M. Osborn, president the cigar makers' international on, held out the hope that the le- zation of light wines and beer ht be enacted by the next con- s. It stated that only 17 members the senate and 45 representatives e prohibition "die hards" and that e of them were "listed among the t valued customers of Washing- s well known bootleggers."

Senator Dwight Morrow of New Jersey—13.

Calvin Coolidge—12.

Lowden, Dawes, Borah, and Senator Watson of Indiana received one vote each.

Theodore Roosevelt was second in the list of probabilities for second place on the ticket.

IN THIS connection it is interesting and perhaps surprising to read the statement made by former Gov. W. L. Harding of Iowa to the Republican national committee, to the effect that the farmers of the Midwest are solid in support of the federal farm board and of President Hoover's farm relief policies. This, Mr. Harding says, he learned in conversation with "thousands of farmers in my own and nearby states." He declared the Democratic seed of discontent has fallen on barren soil, and continued. "The American farmer today is selling his wheat at 20 to 30 per cent more than the farmer across the border in Canada. His corn is bringing 30 cents per bushel more than in the Argentine. The Republican tariff and the farm board—both of which the Democrats would destroy—are responsible for this advantageous condition."

King of Siam

KING PRAJADHIpok of Siam, accompanied by Queen Rambai Barni and her parents, made his official visit to Washington during the week. They arrived in the capital city from New York on Tuesday, being met at the station by Vice President Curtis and other high officials, were duly photographed, and escorted in state to the Larz Anderson mansion on Massachusetts avenue. Next day the royal couple made their formal call at the White House. Just within the front door President and Mrs. Hoover met them and led them to the Blue Room where, after brief conversation, the king requested the honor of presenting his suite. Mr. Hoover giving consent, the royal retinue entered and was introduced by the Siamese minister.

The king and queen soon after hustled back to their temporary home and the return call by Mr. and Mrs. Hoover quickly followed.

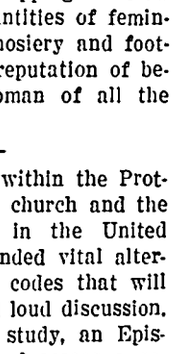
Queen Rambai Barni has been having a great time shopping in New York, purchasing quantities of feminine gear, especially hosiery and footwear. She has the reputation of being the prettiest woman of all the Far East's royalty.

OFFICIAL groups within the Protestant Episcopal church and the Presbyterian church in the United States have recommended vital alterations in the church codes that will surely cause long and loud discussion.

After six years of study, an Episcopalian commission advocates a revised cannon creating ecclesiastical courts to pass on problems of marriage. It would permit ministers to remarry communicants and divorced persons whose fitness had been approved, eliminate all mention of ground for divorce and remarriage, and defining nine causes for annulment.

A commission of the Presbyterian church, deploring the increasing divorce rate, given its approval to birth control practiced only "in fidelity to the highest spiritual ideals of the Christian home," and suggests the establishment of courses of instruction in marriage.

The Presbyterian report will be submitted to the general assembly of the church in Pittsburgh May 28. The Episcopalian revision will be presented to the general convention in Denver September 16.



Dr. H. W. Chase

EMINENT educators from all parts of the country gathered in Urbana, Ill., Friday, to take part in the formal inauguration of Dr. Harry Woodburn Chase as president of the University of Illinois. State officials, alumni and students went to make up a great throng, and the program lasted all through the day and evening. In the morning the procession formed at the library and marched to the men's gymnasium, escorted by the university's famous military band. President George Barr of the board of trustees presided over the inaugural ceremonies. Governor Emmerson extended greetings on behalf of the state; Samuel Wesley Stratton, chairman of the corporation of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, spoke for the university world, and President Rammelkamp of Illinois college for the schools in the state of Illinois.

There were further festivities in the afternoon, and in the evening President and Mrs. Chase held a reception. Doctor Chase, who was formerly president of the University of North Carolina, has been acting president since last July, when he succeeded Dr. David Kinley. There was a note of sorrow in Friday's celebration, for Dr. E. A. Alderman, president of the University of Virginia, who was to have taken part in the program, passed away on the train on his way to Urbana; and only a few days before word had come of the death of Mrs. Kinley in Shanghai, China.

PRESIDENT HOOVER'S little trip to Cape Henry, Virginia, to take part in the celebration of the 324th anniversary of the landing of the first permanent English colonists was sadly marred by a torrential rainstorm. He and Mrs. Hoover went there on the Department of Commerce boat Sequoia, and just as the ceremonies began the downpour came. All were drenched to the skin and took refuge in the railroad station, where tea was served. The President took his wetting good naturedly, and Mrs. Hoover, too, laughed, though her new hat was ruined.

Philip Snowden

GREAT BRITain's landed gentry never did like Philip Snowden much, and their feeling against him was intensified last week when he delivered his budget speech in parliament. The chancellor of the exchequer, weak from illness and a severe operation, stood bravely before the British lawmakers and announced that he intended to put through a plan for the taxation of land values. The present land system, he said, is unjust and a burden to trade and industry, and direct taxation of land values would prove a remedy. He proposed to set up machinery for national valuation, which probably would take two years. When the valuation is completed the tax would be one penny per pound on the capital value.

Laborites and Liberals cheered wildly, but the Conservatives sat glumly silent. The latter will oppose the scheme, and it will be fought in the house of lords, but if the Labor party can continue in power it may be put through.

As for the present budget, Mr. Snowden announced only two changes, both temporary devices. The tax on gasoline is raised four cents a gallon to twelve cents, and there are certain alterations in the payments of income taxes. Mr. Snowden will get $97,200,000 by withdrawal from the exchange stabilization fund that has been on deposit in New York.

SOVIET RUSSIA scored twice during the week. By order of Under Secretary of State Mills a cargo of Russian lumber, brought to Providence, R. I., was admitted to the United States over the protests of domestic producers, Mr. Mills stating that there was no evidence that it had been produced by convict labor. Of greater importance was the signing of a new credit agreement between Russia and Italy which assures large purchases by the Soviets from Italians and the extension of credits by the latter.

EGYPT'S worst railway disaster occurred when the Cairo-Alexandria express caught fire while running at high speed; at least 41 persons lost their lives.

An earthquake in Transcaucasia killed nearly 400 of the inhabitants.

Ten men perished when an oil well near Gladewater, Texas, exploded and became ignited.

Sen. Pittman

SILVER has sunk so low in price, the ratio in relation to gold being now about 60 to 1, that many persons think something should be done about it. Four senators are out to discover what this something may be. They are the members of the senate foreign relations subcommittee on commercial relations with China. The chairman, Key Pittman of Nevada, has just started for China, and will be joined there by Arthur Vandenberg of Michigan, who is on a trip to the Philippines. Claude Swanson of Virginia and Henrik Shipstead of Minnesota will soon sail for Europe.

Pittman and Vandenberg will investigate the possibility of a loan of some of the treasury's surplus silver bullion to the Nationalist government of China for coinage. Swanson and Shipstead will consult with political and economic leaders of Europe concerning a possible international conference on a plan to suspend the practice of demonetizing silver coins and disposing of them as bullion. Both these ideas were presented to the President in two resolutions by the senate, but Mr. Hoover made no response.

EXTRADITION of ex-King Alfonso may be asked by the Spanish republic when he settles down somewhere; he is accused of grafting. Gen. Damaso Berenguer, dictator of Spain until two weeks ago, is in prison awaiting trial for the part he played in the Morocco military disaster of 1921 and for the execution of two officers after the revolt at Jaca last December.

JESUS ENTERS JERUSALEM AS KING

LESSON TEXT—Luke 19:29-48.

GOLDEN TEXT—These shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them: for he is Lord of lords, and King of kings: and they that are with him are called, and chosen, and faithful.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Teaches the People That He Is King.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Teaches the People That He Is King.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Loyalty to the King.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Supremacy of Jesus.

This event is frequently designated as the "triumphal entry" which is somewhat misleading. While it was his official entry into Jerusalem, it was far from being a triumphal entry. In fulfillment of prophecy the Messiah officially presented himself to the Jewish nation. It seems that back of the cry "Hosanna" was taking form the awful word "crucify." It is possible that the word "crucify" was uttered by some of the same persons who had cried "Hosanna." Though they were utterly blind to the fact, God was about to carry out his plan of Hosanna which means "save now" through the crucifixion of his son.

I. The Preparation (vv. 29-34).

1. Sending the disciples for the ass (vv. 29-30).

He told them just where to go to find it, and how to answer the inquiry of the one who owned it. This shows how perfectly the Lord knows all our ways.

2. The fulfillment of prophecy (Zech. 9: 9, Cf. Matt. 21: 4, 5).

Some five hundred years before, Zechariah had predicted this event. Christ's entry into Jerusalem was an exact fulfillment of this prediction. This is highly instructive to those who would understand the as yet unfulfilled prophecies. Since the predictions of his first coming were literally fulfilled, we can expect the second to be literally fulfilled also. The first is established beyond a doubt. The second we should as heartily believe. The prediction of Zechariah 14: 3-11 will be just as literally fulfilled as that of Zechariah 9: 9.

3. Obedience of the disciples (vv. 32-34).

The request may have seemed strange and even unreasonable, yet they fully obeyed. The true disciple will render glad obedience to the Lord, no matter how strange his commands may seem. Obedience to that only which seems reasonable is not obedience at all. May we prove that we are really his disciples by obeying him.

II. The Entry of the King (vv. 35-38).

1. The disciples set Jesus upon the ass (v. 35).

This act of putting the garments upon the ass and setting Jesus upon it showed that they recognized him as their king (II Kings 9:13).

2. Acclaimed as king by the disciples (vv. 36-38).

Some spread their garments in the way, others perhaps having no garments to spare cut down branches of trees and strewed them in his way. This, no doubt, was just as acceptable to him. They praised God for all the mighty works which they had seen.

III. The Critical Pharisees (vv. 39, 10).

Although swept along by the demonstrations of the multitude, the Pharisees deemed it prudent to ask the Lord to rebuke the disciples, as such behaviour might be interpreted by the Roman government as an insurrection. To their demand Jesus replied that such homage was not only fitting but necessary. He declared that if the multitude were silent, the very stones would cry out.

IV.—The King Rejected (vv. 41-44).

Christ knew what awaited him in Jerusalem. Though surrounded by loyal hearts, he knew that the rulers of the nation had no heart for him. His coming trial and death loomed before him so that he wept over Jerusalem. He knew what awful days awaited it and that loyal hearts would gladly welcome him if they only knew. He showed them that their inability to see him as their King and Saviour would result in bringing upon them the destruction of their city.

V. The King Taking Possession of His Own House (vv. 45-48).

Upon entering the city he rebuked the rulers for allowing the house of God to become degraded by carrying on traffic therein for gain. The cleansing of the temple only increased their hatred and opposition to him. The chief priests and scribes even sought his destruction.

Christian Service

There is something deadly in Christian service, where "the excellency of the power" is of us and not of God—The tragedy in so many lives is here; they have no adequate power house, and when they are confronted with a supremely difficult task they fail to cope with it and are disastrously overwhelmed.—Jowett.

March of Civilization Over "Dark Continent"

Although the current crop of moving pictures of animal and native life in Africa valiantly seeks to preserve all our illusions of the inaccessibility of the interior of the Dark continent and of the danger of travel among wild tribes and fierce animals, the evidence is piling up that Africa is becoming pretty well civilized. This is not to say that its tribes have all adopted the ways of the outside world or that the animals have been herded into zoos. We merely mean that transportation facilities have been so greatly developed that railroads—or at least one railroad—cut straight across the continent, while there are few forests so nearly impenetrable that the intrepid explorer is not likely to run into trucks and automobiles calmly speeding along on good motor roads.

Even though the famed pigmies are still pictured as shy and retiring when they are thrown upon the screen, it is evident from their very appearance in the movies that it is not very hard to find them or to seek out their haunts. It is related by one American resident in Africa, whose contact with the pigmies developed from his often taking them into a local trading post in his car, eight or nine easily fitting into a small auto, that nothing is easier to find than a new pigmy village, because the little people move every few weeks.—New York Evening Post.

Historic Watch

In the private collection of an Indiana man is a watch that may be the identical timepiece which Washington presented to Lafayette as a token of his appreciation of the services rendered by the famous Frenchman. That a watch was given is a matter of record, and it is also a fact that the present was stolen from Lafayette's quarters.

The collector's watch fits the description of the historic timepiece, experts say. It has four dials and five hands. One of the dials records the days of the month and another the days of the week. A miniature portrait bust of Washington appears in the upper side of the face. It is in colors and is considered a masterpiece of craftsmanship.—Detroit News.

CHILDREN usually hate to take medicine but every child loves the taste of Castoria. And mothers like its action—so gentle, yet so prompt and effective.

Castoria is a never-failing comfort to children and mothers alike because it was formulated expressly for children—to correct their little ills and upsets.

The beauty of it is you can give Castoria to children of all ages with equally sure results. When baby's cry warns of colic, a few drops of Castoria has him soothed; and free from pain, he is asleep again in a jiffy.

In an older child when coated tongue or bad breath tell of constipation, a more liberal dose is usually all that is needed to cleanse and regulate the bowels.

Your doctor will tell you Castoria deserves a place in the family medicine cabinet until your children are grown. He knows it is safe for the tiniest baby; effective for a child in his teens.

Wm. Bachman received a cut on his forehead and was bruised about the body Sunday afternoon as the result of an auto accident at Clear Lake.

As he did s a car coming at a high rate of speed from the east crashed into the Bachman car, striking it near the front, according to Mr. Bachman.

Both cars were damaged and Mr. Bachman received his injuries when he was thrown about in the car

Exams Were Given Last Week

This week marks the close of another school year. Most of the high school examinations were given last week and the results will be averaged with those of the state examination conducted in the same subjects on May 5. For this reason our own tests have been shortened somewhat. Students who have done regularly good class work from day to day seldom need to fear the tests. They usually pass them satifactorily. Students who have been making low grade all year or semester often neglect to fortify themselves for the examinations and do the necessary reviewing for them and consequently when the grades are all in and averaged up it is found their marks do not justify promotion D or D- is the very lowest passing grade awarded in our school. In the high school it means 75%. When a student has been receiving D's and occasionally an E. which is a conditional mark. he is never safe until the last days work is done and all reports are in and counted. No teacher takes any pleasure in awarding failing grades and it is almost never done unless very necessary to the pupil' future school welfare. By far the most common eror made by teachers is to take the easy road, keep the children and parents in a happy frame of mind by passing students after they have done sub-standard work. A teacher who insists on a fair standard of work and a sufficient amount it and who has the courage to deny promotion to those who negligently fail to meet a standard is not always the most popular But she is doing her pupils a real service.

EUROPEAN BINDWEED MAY BE COTROLLED BY 3 METHODS

European bindweed or creeping Jennie may be controlled by intense cultivation and keeping down the top growth, by pasturing closely or by spraying with chemicals if the patches of weed are not so large as to make the cost prohibitive. according to R. H. Porter, extension specialist at Iwa State College, who is helping Iowa farmers in their weed eradication campaign.

Although various methods of keeping down top growth and killing out the bindweed may be used, the following example is typical: A field infested with bindweed may be seeded down and pastured with sheep The clover should be followed with corn for two seasons. A springtooth harrow or ordinary harrow should be used on the ground before planting the corn. After planting the crop, the field should be blind plowed with a surface cultivator equipped with sweeps or blades that shave just under the top of the ground. This operation ought to be repeated every three to five days In August and September lambs may be allowed to run in the corn in the fall to keep the bindweed eaten off.

Another metthod is to cultivate until June 1st, then plant soybeans in rows so that the surface cultivation can be practiced throughout the remainder of the season. If the corn or soybean method is used two years then the land can be reseeded and pastured or sown to alfalfa.

If a farmer prefers summer fallaw ing surface cultivation is more effective than plowing and disking. Much of the summer fallow in Iowa has been of the wrong type. Plowing and disking keep the soil stirred and cause plant food to be lost. If this practice is not continued the next year, the roots spread worse than ever.

Sodium chlorate spray may be used on small patches in the summer or fall If this spray is used, detailed directions should be secured from the county agent or state college concerning its use as it is dangerous to handle.

In one field of corn in 1930, which of course was an unusual year, the yield of corn on part of a field where the bindweed was constantly cut off was ten times as great as where ordinary cultivation with a shovel cultivator was practiced.

School Picnic Friday

The Klemme Schools will close Friday with an annual school picnic. The picnic will probably be held in the park if the weather is favorable; otherwise picnic goers will have their dinner in the gym

BAYSIDE PARK WILL OPEN TO PUBLIC SUNDAY

Many New Features Found At Amusement Park

The Bayside Amusement Park at Clear Lake, Iowa, will be opened next Sunday, May 24, for the 1931 season, according to John Shea, manager

For several weeks a crew of men has been working in the Park to get things in readiness for the opening date. Some of the older buildings have been removed and others have been repaired, remodeled. painted and decorated. Many changes and improvements have been made since last season. A new whip has been installed, also a new penny arcade with fifty machines and a new fish pond. The roller coaster has been rebuilt and repainted. Several thousand dollars have been spent to put the park in finer condition than ever before. Next Sunday the entertainment concessions, including the merry-go-round, rolly coaster. whip little train and aeroplane swing will amuse visitors for the fist time this season. The skating ink, which was opened two weeks ago, has been improved recently and the instrument that supplies the music has been overhauled. The picnic ground tables and children's playgrounds, which are free to park visitors have been fixed up and are now ready for the opening day at Bayside Park Sunday.

In order that everyone may see the improvements that have been made, there will be no charge for entering Bayside Park on the opening date, according to manager She

AROUND THE COUNTY WITH AGENT WEISS

POULTRY CULLING AGAIN OFFERED THIS YEAR

There Are Many Advantages To Culling Says Weiss

Poultry producers should be interested to know that the culling dipping service will again be offered this year. Mr. Briley the Pioneer Hatchery man will do the work and is more than qualified for the job.

This year more than any other, it is absolutely necessary to either obtain more eggs from less hens or sell the non-layers. This can only be done through culling by one who knows how and has had considerable experience. Mr. Briley certainly has had the experience, as his life work has been connected with poultry management.

The cost per bird for Farm Bureau members will be 2½ cents and 3 cents for non-members. The culling and dipping will start around the middle of June, which means that all persons wishing their flock culled and dipped, should notify the Farm Bureau office either by phone personal call or letter within the next two weeks. When notifying the office would you please state number of birds to be culled and dipped

The following space is for your convenience in notifying the Farm Bureau office:

I wish to have my poultry culled and dipped.

Name .....

Address .....

No of birds to be culled .....

Location of farm ....

....

Fill out and return to the Farm Bureau office at once.

Big Enrollment in 4-H Clubs

All indications point toward a greater enrollment in the 4-H Livestock clubs than ever before. To date au increased enrollment is found in the Market Pig Club. Sow and Litter Club and the new club, the Market or Ton litter. The ton litter club with ten members should furnish a real spectacular exhibit at the achievement show this fall. Try and visualize ten real market litters lined up before the judge. I am ready to wager that in most cases the boys entered in this club will produce hogs faster and cheaper than their fathers can produce their.

The general run of the 47 Baby Beef calves are superior in quality and uniformity than calves were a year ago. I am hoping that some boy or girl will be able to duplicate the calf that Ronald Greiman showed last year.

Enteries are open in the Market pig, the Colt and the Dairy Heifer clubs. It is hoped that by closing time these clubs will also show an increase in enrollment. Send your name boys and girls, right away for either or all of the above three clubs.

CHAPTER XIV

In response to my request to Washington for an experienced man to take charge of rail transportation, W. W. Atterbury, general manager of the Pennsylvania railroad, arrived in France and reported to me September 1, 1917.

At Atterbury's suggestion a cable was sent requesting certain men to fill important positions in the organization. The list included J. A. McRae, general manager of the Long Island railroad, for general manager, with C. M. Bunting as business manager, H. C. Booz as engineer for construction, and J. G. Rogers as deputy. The railway problem was far from easy, and many were the obstacles to be overcome, both in our own and in the French services. Successful management would have been very doubtful under a leader without Atterbury's patience, ability and force of character.

Building in France Used as School for Officers of the A. E. F.

Visits to our training areas by the French, official and otherwise, had become rather frequent. One of the visitors, M. Georges Clemenceau, who always remained a power even when not in any official position (Clemenceau was not then prime minister), called at the headquarters of the First division, accompanied by General de Castelnau, the commander of the group of armies with which it was serving.

Clemenceau Urges Action.

In the course of the conversation with General Sibert, the division commander, M. Clemenceau, with considerable emphasis, urged that our troops be put into the line without delay. It was explained to him by General de Castlenau that as soon as they were sufficiently advanced the troops of the division were to be placed by brigades with the French in a quiet sector near Luneville.

M. Clemenceau went on to say that America had now been in the war several months and the French people were wondering when they expected to take an active part. He said that the French army was exhausted by the war and that its morale was poor. He insisted then, as he did with even greater vehemence later on in an official capacity, that it was not so much a question of troops being ready as it was of giving relief to the allies.

Although the division was only partially trained it could have been used in an emergency, but there was nothing threatening in the situation at that time and no suggestion had been made that it should go into the line for serious work.

The failure of our aviation bureau to keep abreast of airplane development in the contending armies cost us serious delay.

With a lack of data in the beginning, little progress had been made at home on our aviation program at the end of five months. Fruitless efforts to describe mechanical construction and give definite information concerning production and otherwise reach decisions by cable prompted Washington to send a special mission to France, of which Maj. R. C. Bolling was the head.

Through his ability and expert knowledge he rendered exceptional service in co-operating with those in control of allied aviation and in furnishing the necessary technical information upon which to base action at home. The investigation made by his mission confirmed the view that our manufacturers could not begin to furnish planes before the summer of 1918.

Pershing Orders Planes.

After inquiry as to French capacity to turn out planes, I made a contract with the air ministry late in August committing us to an expenditure of $60,000,000 for 5,000 planes and 8,500 engines, to be delivered as rapidly as possible at intervals before the first of June, 1918, on condition that we should provide certain tools and raw materials. To make a contract to pay such an amount appeared somewhat bold, but under the circumstances some one had to take the initiative in providing planes needed at once for the development of our air force.

As aviation was in no sense a logical branch of the signal corps the two were separated in the A. E. F. as soon as practicable and aviation was organized and maintained as a distinct force. To co-ordinate our training with that at home Brig. Gen. William L. Kenly was sent over the latter part of August and was appointed chief of aviation in the A. E. F. Colonel Mitchell, who had succeeded Major Dodd, the first chief of aviation, was given jurisdiction over aviation in the zone of advance. Major Bolling was placed in charge of aviation in the zone of the interior, and soon succeeded in securing a better co-operation through an interallied aircraft board.

The next essential step was the training of airplane pilots, and accordingly arrangements were made for our men to enter flying schools in England, France and Italy after they had passed their preliminary tests at home. Vacancies were held for us in the schools, but we were unable to take full advantage of this opportunity for training because of the delay in sending over flyers. However, we proceeded with the establishment of our own training centers, the first of which, located at Issoudun, was planned for a capacity of 900 pilots by spring.

Use of Gas New Problem.

The use of poisonous gases in warfare had been discussed at The Hague conference in 1899, with the result that several nations pledged themselves against the employment of projectiles the only object of which was to give forth suffocating or poisonous gases. This action had created a feeling of security regarding such a possibility.

Germany had subscribed to the agreement, and when her armies disregarded this pledge and became the first to use gas shells, the impression was that they had now thrown every consideration of humanity to the winds.

This action by the enemy forced the allies to adopt this weapon themselves as a matter of self-protection. From that time on the employment of gas became common to all combatants.

The use of gas in warfare presented an entirely new problem to us, and the organization of a service to handle it demanded immediate attention. The first plan of the War department provided that the engineers should devise and handle the mechanical features and the medical department the chemical, but this soon proved to be impractical and it became evident that, as we had maintained at the beginning, a separate service would be necessary. Meanwhile application was made for a complete chemical laboratory to be shipped to France for use mainly in investigation as supplementary to similar work in the states.

Gas Service Established.

Considerable information concerning gases and the organization of gas troops had been gathered by my staff, and on August 18 Lieut. Col. Amos A. Fries was designated as chief of the gas service. He made some further investigation of the subject in the British and French armies, and as a result an order issued September 3 established a department known at that time as the gas service.

Experiments were at once begun to discover new gases and devise improvements in gas masks. To save tonnage and avoid the dangers of explosion in transit, it was decided, after consultation with the allied services, to request the shipment from the States of the basic elements and manufacture the chemical products in France. After thorough tests of different types of gas masks we adopted the box respirator used by the British, and a preliminary purchase of 100,000 was made to meet immediate demands for training.

With the development of trench weapons and special tactical methods of defense, never had the offensive been more costly in human life than in this war. The ingenuity of the allies was put to the test to devise new engines of war that would make the attack possible without excessive losses.

While the tank, which was simply an armored caterpillar traction motor car, was favored by many officers as an aid to advancing infantry, this opinion was by no means unanimous. Our investigations, however, led to the conclusions that we should accept allied experience and also adopt the tank as a weapon.

CHAPTER XV

I received many reminders September 13 that another birthday had come, including a surprise party by my staff that evening. As this was exactly three months after I had reached Paris, the time seemed to be passing very rapidly, with little apparent progress against the day when an American army should be on the front line.

The importance of shipping for America was beginning to be considered in allied circles. I received a letter from General Robertson, British chief of staff, who spoke of their increasing losses and of his anxiety regarding the voyage of our troops across the Atlantic. As to tonnage for us, he said, it was entirely between Great Britain and ourselves, as none of the other allies could furnish any to speak of.

On top of this, in conference a few days later with Lord Derby, the British minister of war, I was told that his government could not be counted on to furnish us with ships as transports.

The substance of General Robertson's letter was cabled to Washington, suggesting the importance of taking advantage of the opportunity offered to obtain additional shipping. A few days later we were told that needful arrangements for transatlantic transports were being made by the shipping board.

Gloomy Time for Allies.

There was little in the general situation to give comfort to the allies. Losses by the British through continuing operations were still growing. There no longer remained any doubt as to Russia's fate, and it was consequently certain that German troops on that front would be released for service in the west. Under the circumstances the tired allied people were easily influenced by rumors.

The pope's proposal, issued in August, started some talk of peace, but as it failed to condemn Germany's violation of treaties and her inhuman submarine warfare, the note did not make a favorable impression on the allies. In fact, it was criticized in terms that were not at all moderate. The various replies from the different governments did, however, arouse some hope, which was altogether unwarranted by the real attitude of the belligerent powers on either side.

The discussion was unfortunate, because the French people, not realizing that peace was improbable, lost some of their courage, and the depression from this and other factors caused uneasiness among both civil and military leaders.

From our sources of information, which included the intelligence bureaus of the allied armies, we got the impression that Austria, Bulgaria and Turkey would make peace on any reasonable terms if they could do so.

Visits Artillery School.

The military post of Le Valdahon, near the Swiss border, used by us as a school for our field artillery, was one of several which had been kindly set apart for Americans in different parts of France. The others were at Costquidan and Meucon, near St. Nazaire, and at Souge and La Corneau, near Bordeaux, and also at Montmorillon, Saumur and Angers, with a school for heavy artillery at Mailly, southeast of Rheims.

The school at Valdahon was then under the direction of Brigadier General March, an energetic and alert commander. At the time of my visit the Fifth, Sixth and Seventh regiments, comprising the field artillery brigade of the First division, were there for training.

As to the signal corps, and its progress, Colonel Russell, before leaving Washington, had ordered a large consignment of material for both telegraph and telephone services, but so far none had been received except what was sent with us on the Baltic. Finding it necessary to establish our own service in Paris, where the city system was almost useless, we were fortunately able at once to obtain enough material for the purpose in England and France.

The signal corps had, of course, to anticipate the communications necessary in battle. Therefore definite decisions were required some time in advance as to spheres of operations. Tons of material, most of which, except wire, was obtained in France, and any amount of labor was used in the actual installation. The main telephone and telegraph lines in proximity to the actual battle area were, when practicable, laid underground to prevent destruction.

One of the crying needs when we once began to use our own lines was for experienced operators. Instead of trying to train men of the signal corps I requested that a number of experienced telephone girls who could speak French be sent over, and eventually we had about 200 girls on this duty.

No civil telephone service that ever came under my observation excelled the perfection of our system after it was well established. The telephone girls in the A. E. F. took great pains and pride in their work and did it with satisfaction to all.

The Hospital Problem.

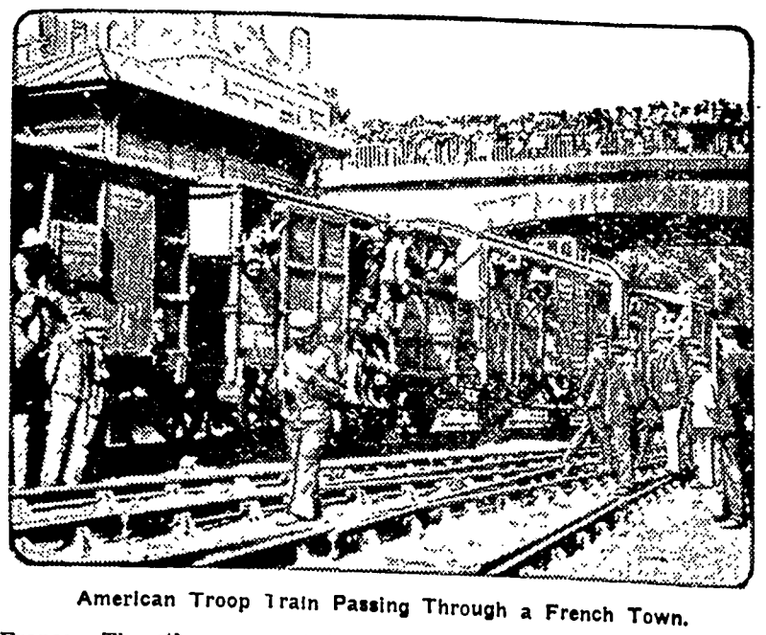
The medical department's plans constantly received my careful attention through frequent conferences with the chief surgeon, Colonel Bradley, and his assistant, Colonel Ireland. Our problem of handling the sick and wounded was more difficult than that of any of the allies, as we had no civil hospitals of our own available. Full provision, therefore, had to be made for hospital accommodations in France, as only convalescents manifestly unfit for further service could be sent home. The early estimates submitted in August, based upon a small force of 300,000 men, called for 73,000 beds in permanent, semipermanent or temporary hospitals, and plans for expansion were in hand to keep pace with the expected requirements of our armies once they should become engaged. While this beginning appeared quite liberal, yet it was calculated to meet further demands of the immediate future.

All the facilities through France were available for the French, yet they had so many sick and wounded that their hospital resources were pretty well exhausted. As there seemed to be only a few suitable buildings that could be assigned to us we had to plan considerable new construction. This required additional labor and material, both of which were scarce, and although there was some delay we managed by persistent effort to keep pace with requirements.

Danger of Coal Shortage.

The destruction by the German army of the mines of northern France had forced the importation from England of a large proportion of the coal needed for various purposes in both France and Italy. Lack of cross-channel tonnage had produced a serious situation, and the danger of coal shortage during the approaching winter gave us much concern. Italy was even worse off, due to the greater distance from the source of supply.

The outcome of our efforts, with the very effective assistance of Admiral Mayo, was that some colliers, one of which was already at Brest, were ordered into service for immediate use, and these were supplemented later by vessels from the shipping board. An organized cross-channel service was completed under the control of our quartermaster department and later transferred to the transportation department. Although the coal question became more or less critical at various times, in the main we were fairly well supplied.



American Troop Train Passing Through a French Town.

CHAPTER XVI

Having learned that, despite my recommendations, little or no attention was being given at home to the importance of teaching our men the use of the rifle, it seemed necessary again to emphasize my views, especially after further knowledge of its neglect in allied armies.

The infantry soldier, well trained in stealthy approach and in the art of taking cover, makes a small target and, if an expert rifleman, there is nothing that can take his place on the battlefield.

JESUS PREPARING FOR THE END

GOLDEN TEXT—And he took bread, and gave thanks, and brake it, and gave unto them, saying, This is my body which is given for you: this do in remembrance of me.

LESSON TEXT—Luke 22:7-30.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Wants Us to Remember Him.

JUNIOR TOPIC—How We Can Remember Jesus.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Meaning of the Lord's Supper.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Meaning of the Lord's Supper.

I. The Last Passover (vv. 7-18).

1. The Passover prepared (vv. 7-13).

a. Peter and John sent to prepare the Passover (v. 8). As the time had arrived for the killing of the Passover, Jesus commanded these disciples to make ready for it.

b. The disciples' inquiry (v. 9). They inquired of Jesus as to where they should prepare the Passover. The true disciple is not only ready to do the Lord's bidding, but anxious to know exactly his will.

c. The Master's strange directions (vv. 10-12). They were to go into the city where they would meet a man bearing a pitcher of water. The usual custom was for the women to carry the water. This unusual occurrence would make it easier for them to find the man. He assured them that they would then be shown a large upper room furnished.

d. The obedience of the disciples (v. 13). They did as Jesus directed them. They did not stop to question the sanity of the command but, as true disciples, obeyed.

2. The Passover eaten (vv. 14-18).

a. By whom (v. 14). Those who sat down to this last Passover Feast were the Master and the twelve apostles.

b. Jesus' words unto the disciples (vv. 15-18).

(1) "I have desired to eat this Passover with you before I suffer" (v. 15). He greatly desired to show them the meaning of the passion through which he was to go.

(2) "I will not any more eat thereof until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God" (v. 16). His death was the antitypical fulfillment of the Passover.

(3) "Take this cup and divide it among yourselves" (vv. 17, 18). By the token of the cup the disciples were partaking of his shed blood. Drinking anew in the kingdom of God does not mean that in heaven this service will be renewed, but that it was symbolic of the heavenly reality.

II. The Feast of the New Covenant Instituted (vv. 19, 20).

This feast took place at the close of the paschal supper.

1. The bread a symbol of Christ's body (v. 19). As bread nourishes and strengthens our bodies, so Christ is food to our spiritual nature. Unless our souls feed upon Christ, we shall perish.

2. The cup a symbol of Christ's blood (v. 20). This was symbolic of the atonement which was made by the shedding of his blood on Calvary's cross. He said, "This cup is the new testament in my blood which was shed for you," indicating that each one must personally accept the atonement made by the shedding of his blood.

III. The Wicked Behavior at the Feast (vv. 21-27).

1. The treachery of Judas (vv. 21-23).

a. The time of its manifestation (v. 21). It was while they were eating the last Passover that Jesus made the announcement of the betrayal, perhaps that Judas might be given an opportunity at this last moment to repent.

b. The betrayal was by the determinate counsel of God (v. 22 Cf. Acts 2:23). Nothing takes place by chance. Even the sinful acts of wicked men come within the permissive province of God. This does not, however, lessen the guilt of sinners, for Jesus said, "Woe unto the man by whom he is betrayed."

c. The sorrowful question (v. 23). The disciples did not seem to suspect one another but made the question a personal one.

2. The selfish ambition of the disciples (vv. 24-27). In this tragic hour the disciples were so concerned with the thought of position that they were striving among themselves as to who should be the greatest.

IV. The Apostles' Place in the Kingdom (vv. 28-30).

Jesus assured them that those who continued with him in his trials would be appointed a place in the Kingdom which would entitle them to eat and drink at his table and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel.

If you've ever taken Bayer Aspirin for a headache, you know how soon the pain subsides. It is just as effective in the relief of those pains peculiar to women!

Don't dedicate certain days of every month to suffering. It's old-fashioned. It's unnecessary. Aspirin will always enable you to carry on in comfort. Take enough to assure your complete comfort. If it is genuine aspirin it cannot possibly hurt you. Bayer Aspirin does not depress the heart. It does not upset the stomach. It does nothing but stop the pain.

Headaches come at inconvenient times. So do colds. But a little Bayer Aspirin will always save the day. A throat so sore you can hardly swallow is made comfortable with one good gargle made from these tablets. Neuralgia. Neuritis. Rheumatism. Pains that once kept people home are forgotten half an hour after taking a few of these remarkable tablets. So are the little nagging aches that bring fatigue and "nerves" by day, or a sleepless night.

Genuine Bayer Aspirin tablets cost so very little after all, that it doesn't pay to experiment with imitations!

World Awaiting Volume of Poetry by Eskimos

Knud Rasmussen, the Arctic explorer, has sprung a surprise upon the world.

He has celebrated his return to civilization, after many years of wandering in the wilds, by publishing a volume of poems by Eskimos.

It will be interesting to see the poems in English. We may be sure Rasmussen has presented them worthily in print, for, with his European education, he has the advantage of being half an Eskimo, and so thoroughly understands his subject.

It seems natural for primitive people to talk of wild picturesque poetry, unrhymed, but full of beauty and imagination, such as we see fixed for all time in the musical names which the Red Indians gave to rivers and lakes and mountains in their native land.

It will be remembered by some that scholars have declared the Eskimo language contains only about two hundred words, which should add greatly to the labors of the poets.

MODERN GAS SERVICE FOR EVERY RURAL HOME

Pressure Gas Appliances Make It Possible for Everybody to Light, Heat and Cook With Gas.

Nowadays the women of the farm and small towns can be just as modern as their city sisters in running their households. Indeed, they need not even envy the gas service of their city relatives They can have modern gas service—for lighting, heating and cooking And at low cost, too—though they live miles and miles from any gas mains

Coleman pressure gas appliances—cook stoves, lamps, lanterns, radiant heaters, irons, water heaters, etc. —make these conveniences possible. And these appliances have been so well perfected that in most cases a scratch of a match and a turn of a valve lights them instantly. The big convenience feature is that they are complete in themselves—they make and burn their own gas from regular motor fuel. You don't have to hire a plumber or pipefitter to connect them up—there are no pipes or tubes. They are ready to serve you, right when you have them delivered.

With these gas-making, gas-burning appliances, the rural housewife is saved much time each day, to say nothing of the unpleasant and burdensome tasks that are abolished.

Interesting pamphlets describing and illustrating the various pressure gas appliances may be had without charge by writing to The Coleman Lamp & Stove Co., 500 Coleman Bldg., Wichita, Kansas.—Adv.

NEW COUNTERFEITS

This day in time not a very great number of Klemme citizens are handling $10 and $20 bills. But tens and twenties are like lightning in one respect—no one knows where they are going to strike next. In the hope you may get hold of a few of them, we are calling attention to a report from Washington to the effect that both the $10 and $20 notes have been counterfeited, and quite a few of them are in circulation. No means of distinguishing the genuine from the spurious are given farther than that the bogus notes are on a poorer grade of paper. These bills probably are not in circulation in this part of the country, and they may never be. Nevertheless, it is not amiss to be on the lookout and to have a bank employee pass on any you may get hold of that may look suspicious to you. So you can keep that in mind, if yu want to pass on them yourself instead of calling on the banker.

UP IT GOES

Ten states have increased their gasoline tax rates so far this year and others are contemplating similar moves At present the average tax rate for the nation is 3 98 cents per gallon and it may exceed 4 cents before the dawn of 1932.

However, it is interesting to note that the new high rates went into effect in the face of constantly growing opposition. In North Dakota, for example, the voters defeated a projected increase on a referendum proposal in Nov.—only to have the legislature pass it later on. In Washington where the rate was jacked up two cents a gallon motorists are busy seeking a referendum, and a one cent increase in Maine was passed only after a long and bitter battle in the legislature.

It may be that the tendency toward higher rates will be a good thing after all—the higher the tax goes, the sooner the public will take action.

"Worm motorist" is rapidly reaching the point where he will turn, as five and six-cent taxes stare him in the face.

COOPERATION — NOT COMPETITION

Not so many years ago, when electricity began to come into common use, it was sagely stated that the gas industry was doomed.

The forecasters missed their guess that time. At present almost twice as many homes use gas for cooking as use any other fuel, and it has found 22,000 industrial uses. The most recent gas developments —central heating systems and refrigeartors — are now rapidly engaging the public interest

The gas industry did not meet competition when electricity came in—it gained a partner in progress. The two sources of heat and energy work together in the modern home and the modern factory.

CENTRAL IOWA FRUIT WAS DAMAGED BY FROST

Temperatures which ranged several degrees below freezing on the orning of May 7th did considerble damage to fruit in central and outhern Iowa, according to reports hich have been gathered from rowers by R. S. Herrick, Secretary f the Iowa Horticultural Society.

"Orchards which were on high ocations seem to have escaped with ss injury and the worst damgge as done to early apples, although inesaps. jonathans and delicious, ave been injured to some extent," ated Mr Herrick.

"Western Iowa seems to have esaped injury from this frost, although they sufered some injury om former freezes. Northern and ortheastern Iowa report but little amage Other places the damage spotted In some cases small uits were injured more than ples and early truck crops sufferd some damage."

"In spite of the frost injuries. I elieve that Iowa will have from 50 75% of a fruit crop. as we have d an unusually heavy bloom," eclared Mr Herrick.

FARMERS SHOULD CULTIVATE CORN WITH WISDOM

Drouth of 1930 Gives Farmers A Special Problem in Cultivation

Farmers this year are faced with n unusual situation in cultivating eir corn because of the drouth st summer They must cultivate conserve moisture and kill weeds ore carefully than ever. The corn op is being started on a better ed bed than normal. The usual oddy seed beds are less common an heretofore, according to E. R enson, of the Farm Crops Departent, Iowa State College

The dry weather of 1930 is also sponsible for the reduced number d vigor of weed seeds in the soil here are however plenty of weed eds and Henson urges that the ght against them be pressed vigrously.

Corn plants and weeds are going compete for moisture in the top soil more than ever this year, and the subsoil mosture cannot be depended upon to finish the crop. A heavy weed growth might prove more serious than usual this year altho a wet growing season would offset this.

Despite the need for moisture conservation, weeds must be killed. If one cultivation kills them, that is enough because further cultivation will not increase the yield. If four cultivations are necessary to control the weeds, go thru the fields four times, because the yields will be increased.

Where the soil has crusted so that rain water does not penetrate the crust should be broken. When weeds are not present this condition is the only one which benefits by cultivation.

Contrary to general opinion, Henson points out that moisture is not conserved by cultivation if the ground is free from weeds. Many experiments and tests have proved this. Only a few weeds use large amounts of water, but certain wild grasses have been found to use 800 pounds of water for each pound of dry matter produced.

From planting time until the corn is 6 to 8 inches high, the spike tooth harrow is very effective in weed control. The harrow does its best work on moderately firm soil and generally is not destructive to the stand. Particular care, however must be taken if the soil is loose.

All cultivations following the harrowing should he as shallow as possible and yet kill the weeds, Henson says. Deep cultivations are detrimental in that they cut off the roots and keep the plant from using the plant food and water in the stirred layer of soil. Henson emphasizes this because most of the plant nutrients are in the top 7 inches of soil, and because most of the summer rains of less than one half inch fail to wet the soil more than 3 to 4 inches, thereby doing no good t the plant except in the unstirred layer around the hill.

Use the type of cultivator and shovel which kills the weeds best and disturbs the corn least.

Statue Held Symbol of Unity of Two Peoples

Senor Daniel V. del Burgo, consul general of Chile in this country, has given a most interesting description of "The Christ of the Andes," the inspiring sculpture which stands at a mountainous elevation of 4,000 meters (13,000 feet) on the Chilean-Argentine frontier, says the newspaper La Verdad, of Caracus, Venezuela. Senor del Burgo says of this appealing figure that the suggestion for its establishment came from seeing the Statue of Liberty in New York harbor. It is seven meters high (23 feet) and weighs three tons. It can be perceived for many kilometers on all the routes connecting the two republics of Argentina and Chile and is held in veneration by the peoples of both nations because it was erected, in 1902, to seal and commemorate the peaceful settlement of the final disputes between the two great South American republics. It was the women of these two countries who collected most of the funds necessary to defray the cost of the statue and its transportation and erection and whose influence was most exerted on the respective governments to provide a site and perpetual maintenance for the monument. "The Christ of the Andes" stands in a lonely and desolate spot, much the same, no doubt, as the wilderness in which "The Man of Sorrows" spent 40 days of his life in prayer and fasting. Yet the statue is not really lonely nor deserted, but visited constantly by thousands in their journeys to and fro, who call it, too, "The Christ of Amity," for this statue is the symbol of the bonds of friendship which henceforth and forever knit these two peoples together in a Christian fellowship.

Oldest School in England

Like all superlative claims there are those who doubt that the King's Grammar school at Canterbury is the oldest, but the evidence points out that it was established in A. D. 631, by the Bishop Felix. Lovers of Dickens will recall that he claimed it to be the oldest, when he sent David Copperfield there. To Dickens, who has perhaps given elsewhere pictures of the worst school in England, the King's school was the ideal school: "a grave building in a courtyard with a learned air about it that seemed very well suited to the stray rooks and jackdaws who came from the cathedral towers to walk with a clerkly bearing on the grass plot."

Spider's Deadly Enemy

There is one enemy against which spider cunning and ferocity cannot contend—a little blue wasp. Finding the door ajar, the wasp swoops down, stuns the doorkeeper with a stab of its sting, then leaves a calling card in the form of an egg among the living blobs of jelly in the silken hammock and disappears. From the wasp egg comes a grub, which devours the baby spiders, whereupon in that subterranean chamber it spins a cocoon around itself and metamorphoses, under protection of the murdered mother spider's trapdoor, into a blue wasp that will repeat its mother's performance on another trapdoor spider.

Double-Thumbed People in Old Spanish Village

A strange village, Palazuelos, has been discovered in the mountains of Spain, says Capper's Weekly.

The strangeness of this hamlet lies in the fact that most of its people have six-fingered hands, two thumbs on each one. Few of the villagers ever have reached the outside world because the mountain trails are impassable to wheeled vehicles. So the world knew nothing about them until recently. Intermarriage caused by extreme isolation is believed by some anthropologists to be the cause of the double thumbs. Other scientists call attention to the fact that since most of the men work in stone quarries and have done so for generations their labor has tended to broaden their thumbs until finally Mother Nature produced an extra member.

The villagers do not regard their double thumbs as a deformity but consider them a mark of distinction. While a comparatively simple operation would remove the extra thumb of any child and give it a normal hand, the villagers violently object to any such suggestion.

Cholera Plague Buried in Scotch Churchyard?

The mysterious fog malady which caused so many depths in Belgium recalls the experience of the Highlands when struck by cholera in 1832. The dread disease visited Inverness, Nairn, the Black isle, Easter Ross, and Dingwall, and swept through the country with devastating results, whole families being wiped out. Rows of cottages were put on fire and burned to the ground. Tradition runs that the plague was brought into the Cromarty firth by a vessel, and that it flew slowly along the ground in the shape of a little yellow cloud. When it arrived at Nigg one of the inhabitants with an immense bag of linen approached the cloud cautiously and succeeded in enclosing the whole of it in the bag. He then wrapped it up carefully and secured it with pin after pin, and buried it in the Nigg churchyard. The spot is marked by a rude undressed stone, near which the grave digger never ventures to open a grave.—Edinburgh Scotsman.

Saved by a Miracle

As a New York-Chicago train was speeding along the railway it encountered a great storm of wind and rain. The stoker persuaded the driver to stop the train, for he insisted he had seen a woman in black dancing before the engine. With lantern in hand, the driver left the locomotive and walked along the line to Rock creek. To his dismay, he found that the bridge had been washed away by the overflowing river When he returned something prompted him to examine the lamp of the engine. He found imprisoned in it an insect, vainly trying to escape. The shadow of the insect magnified by the glass and reflected in the rainy air, had all the appearance of a dancing figure!

Scarlet From Persia

"Few of us know that we owe our most vivid hue—scarlet—to Persia," says a writer in the Manchester (England) Guardian. "Scarlet is the Persian 'saqalat,' and is believed to have been applied to have been applied first of all to cloth of that color imported into Europe from Persia. Easterners knew how to produce scarlet some 2,000 years ago, obviously, or we should not have had the Biblical phrase 'Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall he as white as snow.'

"In the East Christ once was regarded as the patron of dyers, even by followers of Mohammed, and the Persians, who were skilled textile colorists centuries before Manchester came into being, knew a dye-house as 'Christ's workshop' as late as the Seventeenth century."

"Catch" Problem

The "banker's problem," the one that leaves a dollar in the bank after one has made several withdrawals and has finally taken out the deposit, is somewhat after this style: "A person deposits $50, then makes a withdrawal of $20, leaving a balance of $30; a withdrawal of $15, leaving a balance of $15; a withdrawal $9, leaving a balance of $6, and finally a withdrawal of $6, leaving no balance. Total of these balances is $51, which is $1 more than was deposited." The answer to this is that there is no reason why the total of balances should equal the total deposits, but the final balance plus the total of withdrawals must equal the total deposits.

"Cloth-Yard" Shafts

The Archers company of Pinehurst, N. O., says that toxophilites for many years have accepted 28 inches as being the length of the cloth-yard shaft. Elmer's "Archery" says: "Arrows for men are standardized, and have been for time out of mind, at 28 inches. That is the real length of the 'cloth-yard shaft' of the old English ballads because the Flemish weaves brought over the continental cloth-yard of 27 inches, and it was so called to distinguish it from the standard yard of 36 inches which survives today. With the inch-long pile added to it the cloth yard shaft thus became a 28-inch."

Slow to Anger

The American conscience has been dulled to the evils of child labor by a hundred years of indifference. Ours is a people often too slow to anger.—Woman's Home Companion.

China's Right to Title of "Mother of Gardens"

The late Ernest H. Wilson, who was undoubtedly the world's foremost authority on plant introductions from China and keeper of the Arnold arboretum of Harvard university, remarks that "China is, indeed, the Mother of Gardens, for of the countries to which our gardens are the most deeply indebted she holds the foremost place."

There is hardly a garden in this country or Europe that is not indebted to China for the plants that embellish it. The forsythia, the Yulan magnolias, the peonies, the parents of our modern roses, be they hybrid tea, rambler or palyantha; many of the azaleas and primroses, peaches, oranges, lemons and grapefruit have been brought to us from China.

The Portuguese reached China in 1516 and took back with them to their settlements in India the sweet orange, which was later introduced into Portugal. Mr. Wilson says that, so far as he has been able to discover, this was the first plant taken to Europe. From that time to the present era there has been a constant flow of new plant introductions from the East to Europe and America.—New York Herald Tribune.

"Latah" Sufferers Made Victims of Odd Pranks

An extraordinary disease called latah is prevalent in the Malay states, a contributor informs the Sydney Bulletin. To anyone who has never seen latah before, the gesticulations of the sufferers appear at first funny or offensive, until it is explained that a person afflicted with it will, if suddenly startled, fall into a hypnotic state and imitate the gesture of anything in sight. For instance, an old woman suddenly startled by a bicycle bell will violently imitate the pedaling of a cyclist until she falls down exhausted.

That the victims make these movements entirely against their will is evident when one considers the pranks that are played on well-known latahs. They have been known to jump off a lugger in shark-infested waters, drop trays of drinks and crow like a rooster at a sharp command. What causes latah is unknown; there is a theory that it is associated with betel-nut chewing.

American Cliff Dwellers

Cliff dwellers, although of broader application, means in America that prehistoric race that built the houses and villages whose ruins are found in the southwestern part of the United States and especially in the valley of the Rio San Juan and its tributaries. This river rises in the extreme southwestern corner of Colorado, and flows westward along the borders of adjoining states to a junction with the Rio Colorado. As to the origin of these vanished cliff dwellers nothing is known, but it is evident that centuries ago these valleys were occupied by a considerable, sedentary population, who had fixed homes and cultivated fields for crops of corn, beans, gourds and probably other things, by means of extensive systems of irrgation. They made pottery, cloth, baskets, etc., and stone implements, but nothing metallic.

Origin of Word "Dogma"

Contrary to common belief, "dogma" is not originally a word of authority, nor is it connected with "doctrine." "Doctrine" comes from the Latin "docere," "to teach"; "dogma" from the Greek "dokein," "to seem," whose nearest relation in Latin is "decet," "it is seemly," the ancestor of our "decent." "Dogma" at first therefore meant "that which seems to one," or "an opinion." But when the early Christian councils met to discuss the essentials of the faith, what they sought were the "opinions" held in common by all orthodox bishops. These were called "dogmas"; but since they represented the agreement of so weighty a concourse, the word soon acquired the sense of authoritative truth.

Fortune in Croquet Box

A manuscript worth hundreds of dollars a page was found in the lumber room of an English castle.

One summer's day the guests of Lord Talbot de Malahide decided to play croquet and sent servants to fetch the mallets and hoops from their box in an old lumber room. The servants opened a box and, instead of mallets, found a mass of musty crumbling papers yellow with age.

These proved to be the manuscript writings of James Boswell, the great-great-grandfather of Lord Talbot, and among them were 107 pages of his famous Life of Johnson. Only 16 pages of this manuscript had been found before, and their owner was offered $75,000 for them.

Score One for Henry VIII

A lady's position in the Fifteenth century wasn't particularly an agreeable one considering the fact that she sat in the balcony merely as a spectator at the royal feasts which her lord gave. Henry VIII, however, was a considerate old fellow, and allowed the fair sex to enjoy the elegant food. His queen, Catherine, presided at the head of one table, and he at another. "The party being assembled, and the king and queen seated in their chairs of state, it was the custom to begin the ceremonial of royal banquets by presenting hippocras and wafers to the sovereign and his consort."—Kansas City Star.

Timid Wife's Adventure Just Before the Dawn

One of those wives who hate the newspaper business because her journalist husband gets home at 3 o'clock in the morning, was recently given good reason to kick.

She was scared out of her home in Drexel Park.

Of a timid nature, she became thoroughly alarmed early one morning when she suddenly awakened, heard a noise in the house, called to her husband and got no response.

Deciding the long-feared burglar had arrived at last, she clutched her two-year-old son under her arm and fled, clad only in her nightie, across the roof into the open bedroom window of her neighbor's twin house.

She explained the situation to her neighbors. When they had calmed her down a bit she decided to be real brave and call her home on the telephone.

A strange, gruff voice answered and she was more certain than ever that a burglar was in her home. Then she learned she had got a wrong number and tried again.

Her husband answered this time.

Imagine his surprise to hear the voice of his wife whom he had every reason to believe was safely tucked away upstairs.

"This is Edith," she said. "Is that you, Carl?"

"Yes, and where the heck are you, and why?" Carl wanted to know.

Then came the dawn.—Philadelphia Record.

Wonder Clocks Evolved by Old-Time Mechanics

The first clock of the type we know today was made by a Milanese at the beginning of the Fourteenth century, and built in a church tower of his native city, to the great astonishment of the inhabitants. A few years later a wonder clock made its appearance at Padua.

Besides indicating the hours, this was provided with mechanism that showed the course of the sun, the revolutions of the planets, the varying phases of the moon, the months and the numerous fetes of the year. In another hundred years people were marveling at a production which must have been the first alarm clock ever devised. At a stated hour this clock sounded a little bell, at the same moment lighting a little wax candle. How this was done is a secret that passed to the grave with its inventor, but it is worth bearing in mind that until a century ago our only means of obtaining a light was with a tinder-box!

Eighth Wonder of the World

Milan, the capital of Lombardy, is unquestionably the industrial metropolis of the country and essentially the sign and symbol of the new Italy. Indeed, there are few cities in Europe where the spirit of the Twentieth century is more firmly enthroned; yet it still radiates the atmosphere of a brilliant and glowing past and many great and ancient buildings remain to bear witness to the golden age of art. The marvelous cathedral of white marble is the eighth wonder of the world. Five centuries of effort and the genius of a whole series of gifted architects have gone into its making. The great edifice was begun in 1386 and reached its present form due to the generosity of Napoleon. The cathedral is a veritable architectural encyclopedia, a product of all the ages.

Keas' Victory Over Turkey

Keas (large dull green parrots native to the south island of New Zealand), are the most comical of our birds. A party of them were recently sitting up at the Hermitage watching the unwrapping of a crate containing a turkey. When the majestic turkey stalked out, determined to show the country fellows how they did it in town, the keas began to screech "Heha!" most derisively. The turkey gobbled back at them, but so persistent was their squawking and ridicule that soon he could gobble no more. The keas came back day after day to tease him, until he became thoroughly submissive, and accustomed to their jokes.—Christchurch (N. Z.) Press.

Scriptural Books

"Ecclesiastes" and "Ecclesiasticus" are the names of different portions of the Scriptures. The former is accepted by both Catholics and Protestants as one of the essential and canonical books of the Bible. "Ecclesiasticus," or "Wisdom of Jesus, Son of Sirach" as it is also called, is the name of a portion of the Catholic Bible. It was included in the canon fixed by the Council of Trent (1545-1563) and is classified as one of the deuterocanonical books. Protestants regard Ecclesiasticus as one of the Apocrapha and consequently, although they read it for inspiration and edification, they do not use it to fix points of doctrine.—Path finder Magazine.

Queer-Looking Crocodiles

Some of the queerest-looking crocodiles in the world have been received at the British zoo. They are of the kind known as gharials, and came from Borneo. They are most fantastic in appearance, as their alarming-looking, well-armed jaws are drawn out into long, narrow snouts, swelling at the tips. They are the giants of the family, often growing to be well over 20 feet in length. They have the true crocodile teeth, these being set in a straight line and interlocking, the fourth tooth on either side of the lower jaw meeting a notch in the upper jaw.

International Chamber of Commerce Debates Causes and Cures of Economic Depression—Financiers Scored by M. A. Traylor.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

Silas H. Strawn

WHAT ails this old world? What are the causes of the ailments? What can be done about it? These were the questions asked and in various ways answered by scores of the leading men in finance and industry from 43 nations, assembled in Washington for the sessions of the International Chamber of Commerce. Silas H. Strawn of Chicago, newly elected president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, formally opened the meeting and then Georges Theunis, former Belgian premier and retiring president of the international body, took the chair.

The first address was the speech of President Hoover welcoming the delegates, and the Chief Executive seized the occasion to take another hard wallop at war and armaments. He said he believed the certain way to restore prosperity was to lighten the burden of national defense which is now costing the nations more than $5,000,000,000 a year and keeping nearly 5,000,000 men actively under arms. He urged the business men of the five continents to mobilize their influence upon their respective governments to join in the reduction of armament at the international conference to be held next year under the auspices of the League of Nations.

"Of all proposals for the economic rehabilitation of the world," said Mr. Hoover, "I know of none which compares in necessity or importance with the successful result of that conference."

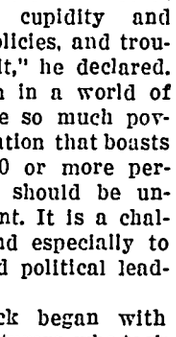
M. Theunis submitted a long and exhaustive report on world conditions, in the course of which he said: "I am personally convinced that the commercial policy and the customs tariff in force in most of the countries of the world constitute one of the fundamental causes of our actual economic troubles. A liberal customs policy might be expected to lead to better business conditions."

He thus showed he was in accord with certain prominent members of the United States Chamber of Commerce who at their meeting in Atlantic City called for a tariff revision downward.

Melvin A. Traylor, prominent Chicago banker, electrified his hearers by a scorching attack on commercial leaders and government executives of America. "Ambition, cupidity and greed have dictated policies, and trouble has been the result," he declared. "It is a tragedy when in a world of plenty there should be so much poverty and when, in a nation that boasts of its riches, 5,000,000 or more persons willing to work should be unable to find employment. It is a challenge to the world and especially to American business and political leadership."

Mr. Traylor's attack began with a criticism of manufacturers who took advantage of technological and management improvements to swell their output to a point far in excess of the possibilities of consumption. And he was equally severe in his characterization of the methods of bankers and of traders on the floors of the stock and grain exchanges. He urged that floor trading and small margin accounts be forbidden.

MR. STRAWN when he addressed the delegates to the international meeting invited them all to Chicago for the "jubilee" celebration of May 10 to 20, and he received assurance that many of them would attend. The midwest metropolis had made most elaborate preparations for this affair, the program including festivals in the brightly decorated "loop" district, big parades, dedication of the replica of Fort Dearborn, first of the Century of Progress exposition buildings, and, to wind up with, the elaborate war game of the air force of the army.



Lord Hampton

PREVAILING depression has not affected the Boy Scouts of America. The national council celebrated at a two day meeting in Memphis the close of the twenty-first year of the organization and announced it had been the best and most eventful of all. President Walter W. Head of Chicago presided at all the sessions and on the last day Mortimer Schiff, New York banker, was elected president for 1931.

At a banquet concluding the first day's session Dan Beard, veteran Indian fighter and chief commissioner of Boy Scouts, presented the silver buffalo, highest honor in the gift of the organization, to an English peer and six Americans. Those honored were Lord Hampton, chief commissioner of British Boy Scouts; Griffith Ogden Ellis, editor of The American Boy magazine; Lewis Gawtry, New York banker; George W. Olmstead, Pennsylvania public utilities executive; Victor F. Ridder, New York newspaper publisher; Robert P. Sniffen, Yonkers, N. Y., merchandising expert, and Mell R. Wilkinson, Atlanta (Ga.) merchant and manufacturer. Citations praised them for distinguished service to scouting.

Lord Hampton, long prominent in English Boy Scout work, served with distinction in the World war. He was awarded the Silver Cross for life saving in 1919 and the following year received the award of the Silver Wolf, the British Scout decoration for distinguished service to boys.

HERE is something else for certain active opponents of the dry law to ponder upon. The District of Columbia Court of Appeals, in an opinion which takes away from Robert de Francis of Washington the citizenship granted him in 1927, holds that a violator of the prohibition act cannot be attached to the principles of the Constitution and is not a person of good moral character.

The decision reversed the action of the District of Columbia Supreme court which had denied a petition by United States Attorney Leo A. Rover seeking to set aside Francis' naturalization.

A. B. Fall

HIS conviction on the charge of accepting a bribe having been upheld by the District of Columbia court of appeals, Albert B. Fall says he has decided not to carry the case to the Supreme court of the United States. The former secretary of the interior, it seems, must serve the one year term in prison to which he was sentenced, and pay a fine of $100,000, unless President Hoover intervenes with a pardon—which is the hope of his friends.

Fall, interviewed at his ranch in New Mexico, said his attitude toward a Presidential pardon was rather passive. "I am an old man," he said. "I am not guilty of the crime of which I was accused. I had fought until I am worn out and considerations for my family impel me to carry the fight no further."

He said he had no money with which to pay the fine and explained he had lost ownership of the ranch on which he lives when a mortgage was foreclosed several years ago.

Mrs. Kermit Roosevelt

MOTHERS and children and their welfare were the topics of especial consideration during the week throughout the nation. To promote better maternity care for the women of the United States was the object of a big meeting in the Park Lane hotel, New York city, the arrangements for which were in the charge of Mrs. Kermit Roosevelt. Prominent physicians and health officers as well as many well known women were among the attendants, the latter including Mrs. Herbert Hoover, Mrs. John Sloane, Mrs. August Belmont, Mrs. E. Marshall Field, Mrs. Jeremiah Milband, Mrs. Samuel Schiffer, Mrs. Robert L. Gerry, Mrs. John R. Drexel, Miss Mabel Choate, and Miss Frances Perkins, New York state industrial commissioner.

PULITZER prize awards for literary excellence in 1930 have been announced, and there are few if any surprises in the list. The main awards are: Best novel, Mrs. Margaret Ayer Barnes, for "Years of Grace"; best book dealing with the history of the United States, Prof. Bernadotte E. Schmitt of University of Chicago, for "The Coming of the War"; best play, Susan Glaspell, for "Alison's House"; best American biography, Henry James, for "Charles W. Eliot"; best volume of verse, Robert Frost, for "Collected Poems"; best piece of reportorial work, A. B. Macdonald of the Kansas City Star; best example of foreign correspondence, H. R. Knickerbocker of the Philadelphia Ledger; best editorial, C. S. Ryckman of the Fremont (Neb.) Tribune; best cartoon, Edmund Duffy of the Baltimore Sun. A gold medal was awarded the Constitution of Atlanta, Ga., for meritorious public service in exposing municipal graft. Several young men were given traveling scholarships in journalism.

GEORGE FISHER BAKER of New York, reputed to be the richest American banker and the third richest man in the country, who died of pneumonia at the age of ninety-one, was buried Tuesday in Tuxedo Park, N. Y., where he resided. Many persons prominent in finance and in life generally were present at the funeral.

Because Mr. Baker died in a period of price depression, the United States and the state of New York will receive in inheritance taxes far less of his amassed wealth than would have been the case had he passed away two years ago. His estate is estimated at something like $500,000,000.

FRENCH opposition to the proposed Austro-German customs accord seems to be effective at least to the extent of keeping the little entente out of line. The foreign ministers of that entente have stated that all questions concerning the accord must find the countries of the little entente firmly united in their attitude, and what that attitude will be is indicated by the fact that the Rumanian government has informed Berlin that it does not wish to negotiate with Germany at this time. M. Briand is being warmly supported by Czechoslovakia.

Chiang Kai-shek

CHINA has virtually abrogated the extraterritoriality treaties, with foreign powers, the abrogation to take effect January 1 next. Chinese jurisdiction over legal cases involving foreigners resident in China is to be established, but special courts for such cases will be created in certain areas, including Shanghai, Tientsin, Mukden and Canton. The mandate to this effect was promulgated by President Chiang Kai-shek's government after negotiations with Sir Miles Lampson, British minister, for abolition of extraterritoriality had broken down. Foreign consuls in China feared that communists would find in the action excuse for attacks on foreigners in the interior, and the number of protecting warships at various ports was increased.

President Chiang Kai-shek is having his troubles with rebels in Canton and with some members of his own Nationalist party. The former are led by Chen Chi-tang, and both they and the conservative Nationalists declare that Chiang must resign the presidency, asserting that he is trying to make himself a dictator. The provinces of Kwangtung and Kwangsi declared their independence.

PRESIDENT DOUMERGUE opened France's international colonial exposition at Vincennes park on Tuesday, and it is expected that the big show will attract throngs of visitors until it closes at the end of October. In addition to all French colonies, the United States, Italy, Belgium, Brazil, Denmark, Holland, and Portugal are represented. Native life of Indo-China, equatorial Africa, and Madagascar has been reproduced even to the extent of importing 3,000 natives.

The United States is represented by a copy of Washington's Mount Vernon home, and by pavilions for Hawaiian, Porto Rican, Alaskan, and Philippine exhibits.

PRESIDENT CARMONA of Portugal is comparatively happy now, for the rather serious revolt in Madeira island has been suppressed by the government forces under command of Magalheas Correia, minister of marine. The federal troops bombarded the rebels at Funchal by land, sea and air until they gave up the fight, the leaders taking refuge in the British legation. The casualties were not excessive, but the normal life of Madeira had been greatly disturbed for weeks and the government in Lisbon was really worried for a time.

MORE than once Mustapha Kemal Pasha has refused to let the Turks make him President for life, but they are doing it in effect anyway. The other day they elected him for his third term of four years, that action being taken by the national assembly in extraordinary session at Angora, and the vote was unanimous. Ismet Pasha and the cabinet resigned pro forma and the premier and other ministers were promptly reappointed.

Yoshihara

JAPAN'S foremost aviator, young Seiji Yoshihara, started his solo flight from Tokyo to Washington, D. C., under the auspices of the Tokyo newspaper Hochi Shimbun. His route for the long and perilous journey was laid out to the northern islands of Japan, thence along the Kuriles to Petropavlovsk, Kamchatka, with two intermediate landings; from there across the Bering sea and along the Aleutian islands and the Alaskan shore, with stops, to Seward, and then down to Vancouver and Seattle. At the latter city he will change his sea pontoons for landing gear and proceed to San Francisco, after which he hopes to fly to the National Capital to deliver to President Hoover a message of good will from Japan. Yoshihara's plane is a light all-metal Junkers with open cockpit and no radio.

The huge German seaplane DO-X, which started for South America months ago and was laid up by a fire, is on its way again and at last accounts had reached Bolama, Portuguese Guinea.

FULL recognition has been extended by the United States to the dual kingdom of Hejaz and Nejd and its dependencies on the Arabian peninsula. After years of warfare, the entire kingdom is now ruled by Ibn Saud. It embraces an area of about 700,000 square miles with a population of less than 5,000,000.

POULTRY

FRYING PAN MAY HURT HEN FLOCK

Too Frequent Use of Vigorous Chicks Harmful.

Fried chicken is a delicious dish when prepared as only a good North Carolina housewife can prepare it, but too frequent use of the most vigorous spring chickens for this dish will hurt the flock next year.

"Do not let the best of the early hatched cockerels go to the frying pan this spring as they are the ones to use as breeding males next season," cautions C. F. Parrish, poultry extension worker at the North Carolina State college. "The first selections of breeding males should be made from the early hatched chicks. Save only those which mature early, and have the size, constitutional vigor and the other desirable traits of the breed being grown. The late-hatched cockerels will in all probability cause weak and undersized chicks."

For breeding purposes, those cockerels showing early sexual maturity are desirable. This is indicated by the rapid development of the comb and wattles and the age at which they crow. The size of the body is an important characteristic of a good breeder, says Mr. Parrish, and may be determined by handling the bird. Those cockerels with a long, wide back, great depth of body, and a long, straight keel bone, should be chosen.

Mr. Parrish says high constitutional vigor is essential and affects the general appearance, size and shape of the bird. Such cockerels are alert, active, refined and well developed. The head of the vigorous male is wide across the skull, set with full, prominent eyes and has a strong, well arched beak. The body is developed with a full round breast and a full abdomen. The shanks are large, containing a large amount of pigmentation and are set well under the body. Birds of poor vitality are the opposite, being ill-shaped, under-developed, small and pale shanked.

Shade Quite Important During Heat of Summer

It is not always going to rain, nor are all the coming days going to be cloudy and dark. During the early part of the season, when the sunshine is so limited, it is well to talk of the advantages of the direct rays of the sun, and they are important, but it won't be long now until we are complaining of the heat. It is then well to remember that there is such a thing as too much direct sunshine and that shade is just as important, and we should provide some for those growing chicks. If their yards have no natural shade, then provide some artificial shade for them. Also remember they relish fresh, clean water as well as you do. Do not allow their drinking vessels to become dirty, and slimy. Keep them clean and supplied with fresh water.

Also see that their roosting quarters are kept cleaned and disinfected. They will not only brood but hatch lice and mites as well as they will brood chicks. It is much easier to keep rid of the pests than it is to get rid of them.

A little elbow grease and back bending exercise will do your chicks a lot of good, if rightly applied.

New Wrinkle for Mites Is "Black Leaf 40"

Old timers who lived in the days when bedbugs were abroad in the land will remember the ancient protection against these pests used by the old settlers when they set the foot of each bed post in a pan of kerosene, thus setting up a barrier against the oncoming hoard which would appear with the setting of the sun. Poultry men of today are using similar devices to keep mites from visiting their flocks. These poultry men are fastening a piece of cloth around each end of each roost, then they saturate the cloth with "Black Leaf 40." The mites, that hide away during the daytime in crevices in the house, find themselves blocked off from their feeding ground by this simple device.

Feeding Goslings

After the goslings are two or three weeks old, if good grass, clover or alfalfa range is available they will need only one light feeding daily of a mash made up of two parts of shorts and one part of fine ground corn, or ground oats or barley. After they are six weeks old, if they still need extra feed, change the mash to equal parts of shorts, ground corn and ground oats, with 5 per cent of meat scraps added. With good grass range the amount of feed needed will be small.

Crowded Houses Bad

Slow development of feathers on a pullet indicates a poor layer, and one of the chief causes of poor feathering, other than the inheritance of the bird, is overcrowding during the summer months in brooder houses. One way to eliminate crowding is to use summer shelters for housing the young pullets. In crowded brooder houses too frequently the chickens develop the habit of roosting on the floor, then as cold weather comes, they crowd, and colds and roup take a heavy toll.

When Travel Was Cheap

Travel by foot in the early 1800s certainly was inexpensive if the 300-mile journey of Elisha Barrell of Hartford, Washington county, New York is taken as a criterion. Barrell in 1826 walked from Gouverneur to his home in 16 days at an expense of $2.42. This was exclusive of liquor he bought en route. One overnight stop cost him only 18 cents.

Memorial Day

The boys in blue and the boys in gray
Are friends again This Memorial Day;
The songs of hate and the guns of fate
Resound no more, as they await
The Reaper's call.

Their ranks are thin, and thinner grow
As one by one their comrades go
Where joys abound and songs resound,
With peace and friendship all around,
Through Heaven's gate.

We love you all, both blue and gray
And hope 'gainst hope you'll with us stay
For many a year, and spare the tear
That fills the eyes whose vision clear
Sees Garbriel blow.

Receive our homage, blue and gray
We honor you all, 'tis Memorial Day.
Memories of glory in song and story,
Mem'ry, though heads are bent and hoary,
Of glorious days.

News Review of Current Events the World Over

President Hoover Orders Drastic Economies in Departments—Old Military Posts May Be Abandoned —Briand Is Defeated.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

Sec. Hurley

PRESIDENT HOOVER has notified the members of the cabinet that they must introduce economies in their departments wherever possible. The civilian personnel is to be reduced and the overhead expenses cut drastically. The message went out after the President had conferred with Secretary of War Hurley and Secretary of the Navy Adams, and it is evident he expects many of the economies to be made effective in those departments.

Surveys have been recently made indicating how savings could be made by the sale of old Indian posts, navy shore stations, coast artillery fortifications, and yards and other shore properties of the navy that are no longer needed for purposes of national defense. Secretary Hurley said the other day that the administration desired to remove army posts from the "pork barrel" classification, and it seems that among those considered superfluous are Fort Lincoln, North Dakota; Fort Meade, South Dakota; Fort Missoula, Montana; Fort Eustis, Virginia, and various posts along the Mexican border. Some air flying fields also may be abandoned. How far the expenses of the military establishments can be cut is problematical. The last annual supply bill for the War department carried about $445,000,000, of which approximately $111,000,000 was to be devoted to nonmilitary activities. The latter figure included $60,000,000 for rivers and harbors and $35,000,000 for Mississippi floor control.

As for the navy, it is known that civilian labor cost that department $79,000,000 last year. Some official investigators have estimated the Navy department personnel at Washington could be cut as much as 40 per cent without impairing efficiency.

Congressmen in whose states are located the obsolete army posts and surplus shore stations probably will fight against their abandonment, that being their habit in matters of this sort, but if economies are applied throughout all the executive departments their political wrath may be unavailing.

FRED C. CROXTON, vice chairman of the President's emergency committee for unemployment, stated that during the week ending May 9 contracts were awarded for public and semi-public work amounting to $27,904,709. This brought the total since December 1, 1930, to nearly a billion and a half.

M. Briand

FOREIGN MINISTER Aristide Briand was persuaded by his friends to be a candidate for the presidency of the French republic and then some of those friends let him down. The result was that he failed of election on the first ballot and, astounded and broken hearted, he withdrew from the contest. Paul Doumer, venerable president of the senate, was elected. This action by the French parliament was of importance not only to France but to Europe and all the world. It means that for the present at least Briand's policy of peace and conciliation is discarded and the nationalists are in the saddle. It is possible Briand will continue to represent his government in the debates of the League of Nations at Geneva, but if he does he will be subject to daily orders from Paris. More likely it is that he will soon retire to Cocherel, his home. He has been in poor health for many months and it is feared this defeat will break him down badly. Andre Tardieu and Edouard Herriot, leaders of the left, are held mainly responsible for the rejection of Briand.

ANTI-CLERICALS of Spain, egged on by communists and very possibly by monarchist plotters, staged violent riots in Madrid and other cities for several days, and the government was forced to proclaim martial law. The mobs directed their attacks against Catholic churches and other religious edifices and burned many of them. Monks and nuns were beaten and driven through the streets, and in some cases the troops that were called out refused to move against the rioters, telling their officers they would not fire on the people.

Angel Galarza, the republic's prosecutor, declared the riots were the result of a carefully laid monarchist plot and that there would be a monster trial of captured royalists in which former King Alfonso will be judged, in his absence, for complicity. The Vatican state department instructed Papal Nuncio Tedeschini at Madrid to demand from the government an explicit apology for the attacks on churches, monasteries and convents. The Vatican protest, while not blaming these attacks on the Republican government, asserted that violence against religious orders does not represent a general political tendency, but is the result of the anti-religious odium of a small minority of Spain.

PRAJADHIPOK, king of Siam, underwent a successful operation for the removal of a cataract from his left eye, and is recovering nicely at Ophir hall, the Whitelaw Reid mansion in Westchester county, New York. He was an excellent patient and, being under only local anesthesia, he knew what was going on and co-operated in every way with Drs. J. M. Wheeler and T. N. Johnson, who performed the operation. When the cataract had been extracted his majesty said: "I see the light."

Sen. Fletcher

FIFTY railway executives have united in asking an increase of freight rates that would bring $450,000,000 more revenue to their roads, but it will not be granted without a fight. Duncan U. Fletcher, senator from Florida and ranking Democrat on the senate commerce committee, voiced the opposition to the plan. He called for lower rates rather than higher carrying charges and said one reason why trucks were moving so much freight today was because of "high rail rates."

"I cannot see how the railroads can expect to increase their revenues by increasing rates," he said. "Some ten years ago an increase of 40 per cent was allowed the railroads and this brought the rates up to the highest point ever reached. They have been revised downward by the interstate commerce commission in 5,000 out of 6,000 cases brought.

"Today the railroads complain of a loss of business and lay a good deal of that to competition by trucks and to some extent airplanes. Undoubtedly they would increase their revenues by raising the rates provided they could carry the same amount of tonnage, but it is perfectly obvious that one reason why trucks are moving so much freight is because of the high rail rates. Consequently if these rates were increased there would be an inevitable decrease in tonnage."

ONE of the world's greatest scientists, Prof. Albert A. Michelson, formerly of the University of Chicago, passed away in Pasadena, Calif., after a long illness and was laid at rest in Altadena. He was the recipient of all the honors the world of science could bestow, not the least of which was the Nobel prize for his achievement in measuring the speed of light, and it has been said that his discoveries and inventions added billions to the wealth of the world; but withal he was exceedingly modest and unassuming and always declared he carried on his great works in physics because they amused and interested him. Doctor Michelson was a native of Poland but was brought to the United States when a babe and was educated in San Francisco and the naval academy at Annapolis. Two years after his graduation he went back to the academy as an instructor, and it was then he began the experiments and investigations that continued throughout his long life.

Another eminent man, Eugene Ysaye, master of the violin, died in Brussels, Belgium, at the age of seventy-two. He is survived by his American wife, the daughter of Dr. Herman Dincin of Brooklyn, N. Y., whom he married in 1927.

Walter A. Strong, publisher of the Chicago Daily News and one of the most forceful figures in American journalism, died suddenly of heart disease. He was only forty-seven years old. He became publisher and principal owner of the News in 1925, after the death of Victor Lawson.

Sec. Stimson

SECRETARY OF State Henry L. Stimson, in an address on United States foreign relations and especially American policy toward Latin-America, served notice that our army and navy will not be used to collect debts from foreign nations. At the same time, he made it clear, the present administration would give to Americans who have investments abroad all the protection, counsel and assistance to which they are entitled under international law.

Defending the Hoover policies in Nicaragua, which have been attacked, Mr. Stimson declared the administration was not departing from American traditions, adding that "the United States would continue to be zealous in its concern for the lives of its nationals wherever they may be found." He characterized the current policy toward Latin-America as one of removing sore spots which have injured good will and American trade.

Mr. Stimson expressed confidence that the Anglo-French negotiations would eventually be successfully concluded, expressing the opinion that a great stimulus had been given the prospects for success of the league conference on general disarmament to be held next February.

Cultivation of good will between nations was described by him as "the great business of diplomacy."

"Honest people in one nation find it notoriously difficult to understand the viewpoint of honest people in another," he said. "State departments and their ministers exist for the purpose of translating the viewpoints of one nation into the terms understood by another. Some of our most important work and efforts at the present time lies in this direction."

Prince of Wales

SPEAKING before the Manchester chamber of commerce, the prince of Wales harshly admonished British business men for their failures in getting and holding foreign trade. The only way which Great Britain can gain a larger share of the South American market, he declared, was by imitating North American business and advertising methods. The prince is delivering a series of speeches dealing with conditions he found prevalent in South America during his recent tour.

Not only did Wales score British business methods, but he also dipped into politics in a way that caused a sensation. His advocacy of "manufacturing within tariff walls" cuts squarely across the hottest political issue of the moment in Britain—tariff versus free trade—and was an unexpected blow to the free trade labor government.

PRESIDENT HOOVER has appointed George Hastings of New York as a member of the White House secretarial staff to succeed French Strother. Mr. Hastings is given the title of executive clerk and will handle the President's outside social welfare interests, including his contacts with the conference on child health and protection. He will take up his duties about June 1 after 15 years of social welfare work in New York.

Al Capone

THERE is consternation in gangland. And pleased surprise among the decent citizens of Chicago. Al Capone, the redoubtable gangster chieftain, hitherto looked upon as almost unconquerable, has been defied and is seemingly doomed to fall in one of his latest efforts to add to his monetary stores. It is the dyeing and cleaning industry of Chicago, which has been a fruitful field for racketeers, that has done the defying, and in its bold stand it is backed up by the law enforcing agencies of the city and state.

"Scarface" thought the time was ripe for him to take charge of the industry, and through agents he informed the Cleaners and Dyers institute that he would do so for 75 per cent of its annual receipts in membership dues, which would be about $190,000. For this he promised to keep prices up, to police the industry and to bring into line any recalcitrant members. A committee from the institute met Capone in his hotel headquarters in Chicago and he repeated his offer, reducing his demands to 50 per cent but declaring if his offer were not accepted he would take over the industry anyhow. The institute, however, happens to have as its chairman Dr. Benjamin M. Squires, honest and nervy, who had practically freed the industry from the racketeers. He told Capone no gangster associations would be tolerated, and State's Attorney Swanson promised to support him to the limit in this stand.

Capone's efforts to take over the cleaning and dyeing industry were regarded by Assistant State's Attorney Charles J. Mueller, in charge of racketeer prosecutions, as an indication of the reverses suffered by the gang in recent months.

"There is no question that Capone's mob has been hard hit, and that he needs money," said Prosecutor Mueller. "His gambling racket has felt the force of raids by the police and the state's attorney's office, in connection with the special grand jury, and some of his biggest breweries have been raided by the federal agents. The prosecution of the big shots in the gang by the federal government, and the high bonds required, have no doubt caused Capone to look around for new ways of raising money."

FRANCE'S amateur boxing champions, eight in number, who came over to meet the team of American champions from Chicago and New York in the former city, were defeated but made a good showing. They lost five of the bouts and won three. The tournament was a feature of Chicago's fortnight of "Jubilee."

Tribute to the Poilu at Verdun

In telling the story of the battle of Verdun I have tried to trace the parts played by the leaders, but I pass quickly now to the man to whom victory was due—the soldier of Verdun.

"Our next victories depend upon your heroic resistance," Joffre had told the poilu; and the latter's measure was taken at Verdun, for nowhere else in all the atrocious war was such an abyss of torment in store for him. "He has learned much who has known pain," wrote the author of "The Song of Roland"; and there was such pain and suffering at Verdun as had never been known before. Verdun was the great charnel house where it was necessary to stand firm with death overhead, under foot and on all sides.

The soldier of Verdun was unquestionably well commanded and well maneuvered; yet to such leaders were given incomparable soldiers. These soldiers stood fast in mud, cold, snow and under torrents of fire against numberless attacks. Tormented with weariness, with broken arms and legs, almost isolated and often without news of the progress of the battle, they remained at their posts, barring the road to France.

I saw a whole line of dead runners, staking out the path from Fort Vaux; they had played leapfrog with death. I saw, beneath the hail of gas shells on June 22, 1916, during the preparations for what was perhaps Verdun's most gruelling day, a first aid station near Souville, foggy with poison gas and crowded with wounded in masks, dying in masks, attended by masked chaplains; and it was like a descent into hell.

Verdun's soldier was Verdun's martyr. How can one cite any outstanding deeds among so many thousands, without committing an injustice? In order to plant a cheval de frise in front of the lines, a man leaps from a trench. He is killed. A second. He is killed. A third. He is killed. A fourth finally succeeds in establishing the barrier. None had hesitated before certain death.

Of these sufferings, of this splendid sheaf of effort, sacrifice, courage, endurance and daring, the radiant beauty of Verdun is composed. Like that of cathedrals, it is an anonymous work. As in cathedrals there are bits of sculpture which the light of day never bathes and which no one beholds, so in the battle of Verdun are forgotten splendors and marvels which will remain forever unknown. Each of our cities, each of our villages, made its offering to rebuild Verdun. Verdun was built by the whole of France, yet, instead of bearing stones to the monument, each city, village and hamlet furnished its dead and mutilated. It is a monument of flesh and blood—of French flesh and blood.

To the pilgrims who come to these scenes to evoke the bloody and immortal past, the country about the fortress appears as a great cathedral whose columns spring from the sacred hills—Douaumont, Vaux, Hardemont and Mort-Homme—and rise to the celestial vault itself—the only roof worthy to cap such grief and such glory.—Henry Bordeaux in L'Illustration, Paris (Translated for the Kansas City Star).

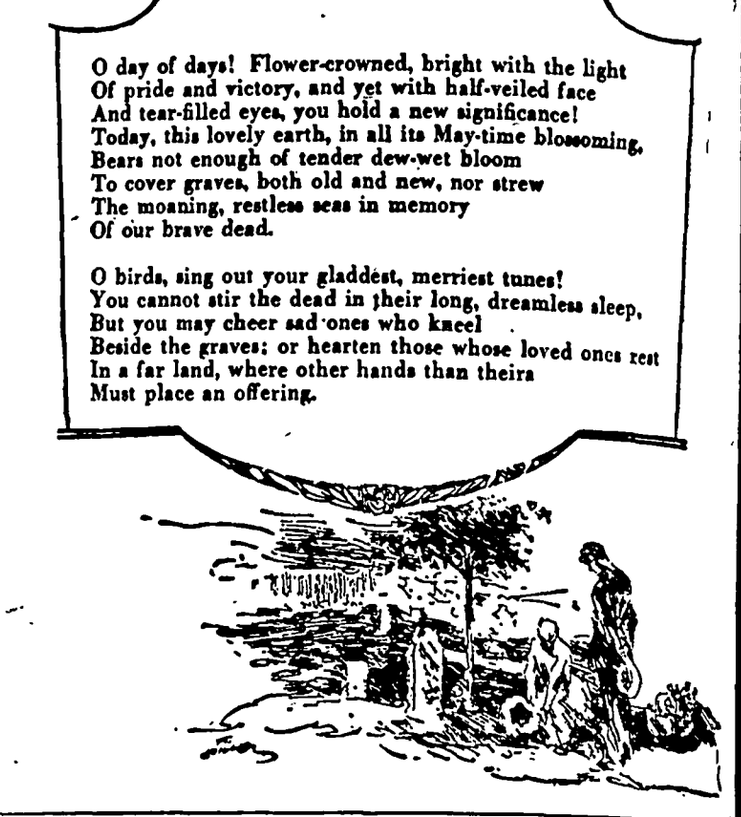
MEMORIAL

O day of days! Flower-crowned, bright with the light
Of pride and victory, and yet with half-veiled face
And tear-filled eyes, you hold a new significance!
Today, this lovely earth, in all its May-time blossoming,
Bears not enough of tender dew-wet bloom
To cover graves, both old and new, nor strew
The moaning, restless seas in memory
Of our brave dead.

O birds, sing out your gladdest, merriest tunes!
You cannot stir the dead in their long, dreamless sleep,
But you may cheer sad ones who kneel
Beside the graves; or hearten those whose loved ones rest
In a far land, where other hands than theirs
Must place an offering.



Memory of Older 'Decoration' Day

There was a time, within the memory of those of us who have reached the age of discretion, when Memorial day was a fine holiday indeed, with lively goings-on to impress its significance upon us. In the morning Main street would blossom out in a magnificent array of red, white and blue, and all through the forenoon there would be a hum in the air that betokened enterprises of great pith and moment; ladies would dart hither and yon carrying great baskets of sandwiches, and horses would trot up the street dragging carryalls full of folk from the country. In the lunch hour there was a lull while the sandwiches were being consumed; but by the zero hour, 2 o'clock in the afternoon, everything was ready and things began to happen.

On the town green assembled the town carpenter, the keeper of the livery stable, the owner of the Acme furniture store, the town constable, the president of the First National bank, the teacher of mathematics in the high school, the driver of the express wagon, the agent at the steamboat wharf and the judge of the Circuit court—prosaic old gentlemen all, and on other days of the calendar dignitaries to be greeted respectfully but with no great show of awe. Today, however, they wore an air of vast importance: they were togged in blue suits of impressive cut, somehow reminiscent of the pictures in the history book, and they wore hats of the sort affected by the late William Frederick Cody, whereof the crown was adorned with a gold wreath and the letters "G. A. R.," lending a very military appearance to the whole turnout.

Order of March.

These assembled together with many lesser fry also attired in uniforms of various colors and cuts; and presently, after a marshal wearing a red sash had ridden up and down for a while on a black horse, there was a bugle call and the parade assembled. The order of march was as follows:

His Honor the Mayor.
Orpheus Silver Cornet Band.
Grand Army of the Republic.
Water Witch Fire Company.
Semper Fidelis Fire Company.
Red Men.
Junior Order United American Mechanics.
Short Pants Brigade (predecessors of the modern Boy Scouts, and every bit as patriotic).

When all these had been formed into line the march to the cemetery began. As to what took place there the memory of most of us will be hazy. Suffice it to say that the exercises, while somewhat puzzling as to their import, were agreeably vociferous, and when they had come to an end we all felt that a great deal had been accomplished. On the way back to town, if there was not a thunderstorm, there was a great deal of dust, so that the blue uniforms, so impressive in the afternoon, were by evening the least bit bedraggled.

Younger Folks Take Charge.

Or were they? Perhaps they only seemed so. For by this time the heroes who wore them were quite forgotten; the evening was given over to a town dance, and the young people were in full charge. Valiantly the veterans tried to hold the limelight. The President of the First National bank walked up to the post office to get his mail, his blue coat changed for an alpaca but his military hat still in place; and not one of the girls fluttering through the dusk paid the least bit of attention to him. His comrades stood around on the street corners retelling great stories as inducement to all who would stop and listen; but few stopped and hardly any listened. Their stories had all been heard before, and nobody seemed to see their hats. Occasionally one of them tried a brave buck-and-wing to harmonica accompaniment, but his whoops died quickly as the fiddles tuned up in the town hall.

Civil War's Great Issues.

Now things haven't changed much except that the young people take charge early in the morning and there doesn't seem to be any time for the old veterans at all. Many a town has not a single Grand Army member left; in the few towns where one or two survive the march to the cemetery is usually omitted, for it has been found that at the age of eighty-five the strain of listening to vociferous exercises may be too much even for a heart that went through Shiloh. Thus the day tends to become more and more a romantic formality, a legal holiday which allows tired citizens to take a trip in an automobile with a flag stuck in the radiator cap. Perhaps this is just as well. For the Civil war is unique among our country's great wars in this respect: the issues which it decided seem remote, fantastic and without application in this day, and the Fourth of July as we listen to the Declaration of Independence and the principles which it enunciates seem startlingly close at hand; we rub our eyes and realize that this document and the immortal signatures is very much alive today. On Armistice day, as we listen to the "Fourteen Points," the World war seems almost to be going on yet; these "Fourteen Points" already form the basis of statemen's deliberations, and how they are to be applied is still a vital matter in many places on the earth. But on Memorial day as we listen to the Gettysburg speech everything seems hazy. Union? Slavery? Is it possible that Americans fought over them? Did the great conflict settle anything which would not have settled itself had we been patient enough to wait a little longer?

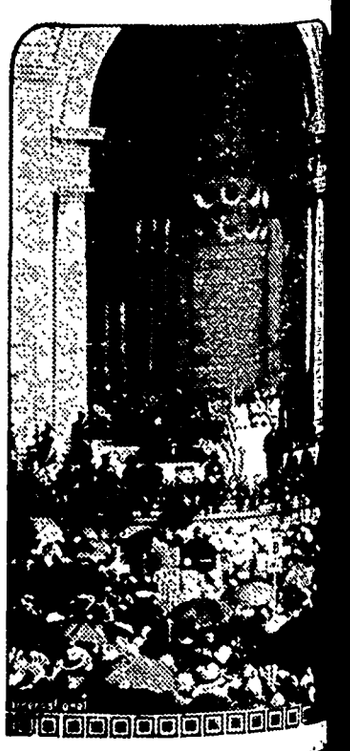
PRESIDENT'S TRIBUTE



President Hoover making short address to veterans as part of Memorial day ceremonies.

Service in Patriotism

Patriotism is never noisy or blatant, never paraded, never indeed much talked about—any more than a man talks of his love for his family—for it is service and sacrifice, service quietly rendered, and sacrifice uncomplainingly endured.

Lesson of the Day

The very best way to honor those whom we praise and on whom we bestow monuments and flowers will be to show a practical appreciation of what they did by taking proper care of the inheritance they created, preserved and handed over to us.

he story of how this smart "cos- monger suit," as it is called, came be, is interesting. For generations back in history) London coster- ngers (sellers of various wares) e attended the Derby day events aring costumes covered with ocean rl buttons. This curious custom e an American designer an idea he made up a spectator suit which will agree is at once novel, at- ctive and wearable. The model as strated is fashioned of bright qual- kind red flannel, but in any pre- red color it would be stunning.

en who love pretty and becoming clothes.

To go through the summer without at least one of these flattering cunning wraps made of sheer velvet, either black or in colors, well, anybody that is anybody among fashion's followers would never for a moment entertain such a thought.

There are as many ways of making these fanciful transparent velvet jackets as there are jackets. The same may be said in regard to their colors. After one acquires a black velvet model to wear whenever and with whatever frock one may please, the urge begins to stir within to try colors—a coat of bright green to wear with one's green and white print, or a delicate blue or an ivory white to top this or that costume.

Although transparent velvet wraps vary in length, the hipline is the popular stopping place. Particular attention is given to sleeve detail. In the elaborately tucked model shown in the group illustrated, elbow room is ample. The finely tucked rolled collar which distinguishes this model is unusual, as the majority of the little velvet wraps go collarless. The color for this charming fantasy is lettuce green and the velvet is, of course, the thin-to-the-point-of-transparency sort.

The idea of velvet flowers posed at the back of the neckline as you see to the left in the picture, is fetching. This simple wrap-around hip-length coatee is of coral transparent velvet. The huge loose sleeves are brought in sharply at the elbow in a series of soft shirrings. One of the roses is black and the other is coral.
